I desire to answer a few of the strictures which the gentleman has been pleased to place upon us. He states that the civil-rights bill will be death to that section. I cannot see it in that light. We lived together before the war—four millions of colored men, women, and children, with the whites of the South—and there was no special antagonism then. There might have been some friction in some places and in some cases, [great laughter,] but no special antagonism between the two races in the South. I fail, therefore, to see the force of the gentleman's argument. I would like to ask why, in all conscience, after the measures of education, these noble efforts to educate these "barbarians," as he terms us, for two hundred years or more—after all the earnest efforts on their part, with their superior civilization, and all the appliances which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ROBBINS] claims were brought to bear on these "barbarians"—I ask why there was no such antagonism then, but just at this time? Why, sir, if it be true, as the gentleman says, that such philanthropic efforts have been put forth for the education and improvement of the black race, there would be no occasion for antagonism. It is, I believe, a law of education to assimilate, to bring together, to harmonize discordant elements, to bring about oneness of feeling and sentiment, to develop similarity of thought, similarity of action, and thus tend to carry forward the people harmoniously. That does not seem to have been the case, if the argument of the gentleman from North Carolina is correct. Now, look at the fallacy of the gentleman's argument. This race of barbarians, in spite of all their disadvantages, had been educated to such an extent that the white community of the South were not afraid of them after their emancipation. Is not that singular?

The gentleman further states that the negro race is the world's stage actor—the comic dancer all over the land; that he laughs and he dances. Sir, well he may; there are more reasons for his laughing and dancing now than ever before. [Laughter.] There are more substantial reasons why he should be happy now than during all the two hundred years prior to this time. Now he dances as an African; then he crouched as a slave. [Laughter and applause.]

The gentleman further states that not more than eighteen hundred negroes were killed during the four years of the war. The gentleman forgets some battles; he forgets Vicksburgh; I presume he does not remember Petersburgh; he does not know anything of Fort Pillow. He knows nothing about all the great achievements of the black men while Sherman's army was moving on to victory. He forgets who entered Charleston first; he forgets who entered Richmond first; he forgets all this in the blindness of his prejudice against a race of men who have vindicated themselves so nobly on the battle-field. But I will grant the gentleman the charity of dwelling no longer on that point.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman states that during the struggle for freedom four millions of negroes lifted no hand to liberate themselves; that no stroke was made by them to deliver themselves from their thralldom; yet a few moments afterward he makes the statement that their kind-heartedness prevented them from rising up and destroying the wives and children of the rebel soldiers who were at the front. I accept the admission. Sir, there dwells in the black man's heart too much nobleness and too much charity to strike down helpless women and children when he has a chance to do so. No; though the liberty of our race was dear to us, we would not purchase it at such a dastard price as the slaying of helpless women and children, while their husbands and fathers were away. I would scorn the men of my race forever if they had lifted their hands at such a period as that against helpless women and children, who were waiting in silent anxiety the return of their natural and lawful protectors. Our strong black arms might have destroyed every vestige of their homes; our torches might have kindled a fire that would have lighted up the whole South, so that every southern man fighting in the army would have hastened back to find his home in ashes. But our race had such nobleness of heart as to forbear in an hour of such extremity, and leave those men their wives and children.

Sir, I mean no disrespect to the gentleman, but I think the facts will bear me out in the statement that on every occasion on the battle-field where the black man met the white man of the South there was no flinching, no turning back, on the part of the black man. He bravely accepted his part in the struggle for liberty or death.

The gentleman says he still looks upon the whites as the superior race. That may be the case in some respects; but, sir, if they educated us they certainly should not find fault with us if we follow out what they have taught, and show ourselves obedient servants.

But, Mr. Speaker, there is another point. The gentleman states that we would make no movement to achieve our liberty. Why, sir, the education which those gentlemen gave the southern slaves was of a peculiar kind. What school-house in all the South was open to the colored race? Point to one. Name the academy where you educated black men and black women as lawyers or doctors, or in any other department of science or art. Point out the county. Give us the name of the district. Tell the name of the school commissioner. Name the teacher. I will name one. Her name was Missa Douglas. And for the attempt to educate those of our race she was incarcerated in prison, and remained there for five years. That is the only instance, so far as I remember, of the education of the colored people of the South.

Examine the laws of the South, and you will find that it was a penal offense for any one to educate the colored people there. Yet these gentlemen come here and upbraid us with our ignorance and our stupidity. Yet you robbed us for two hundred years. During all that time we toiled for you. We have raised your cotton, your rice, your corn. We have attended your wives and your children. We have made wealth for your support and your education, while we were slaves, toiling without pay, without the means of education, and hardly of sustenance. And yet you upbraid us for being ignorant; call us a horde of barbarians! Why, sir, it is ill-becoming in the gentleman to tell us of our barbarism, after he and his have been educating us for two hundred years. If New England charity and benevolence had not accomplished more than your education has done we would still be in that condition. I thank the North for the charity and nobleness with which it has come to our relief. The North has sent forth those leading ideas, which have spread like lightning over the land; and the negro was not so dumb and not so obtuse that he could not catch the light, and embrace its blessings and enjoy them. Sir, I hurl back with contempt all the aspersions of the gentleman on the other side against my race. There is but very little difference, even now, between the condition of the whites of the South and the condition of the blacks of the South. I have given some attention to the statistics of education in the Southern States. I find this pregnant fact, that there is about 12 per cent. more ignorance existing among the whites in the South than there is among the colored people in the South, notwithstanding the slavery of the colored race. I wish I had the reports here, that I might show the gentleman how the facts stand in reference to his own State especially, because, if I remember correctly, his State shows there is a preponderating aggregate of ignorance in the State of North Carolina, amounting to 60 per cent. and upward, compared with the entire number of the inhabitants in that State.

Tell us of our ignorance—the ignorance of the colored race! Why, Mr. Speaker, it appears to me to be presumption on the part of the gentleman to state that we—we whom they have wronged, whom they have outraged, whom they have robbed, whose sweat and toil they have had the benefit of for two hundred years; whose labor, whose wives, whose children, have been at their beck and call—I say it ill-becomes them to taunt us now with our barbarism and our ignorance. Sir, if he will open to us the school-house, give us some chance, we would not have to measure arms with him now. But even now, Mr. Speaker, although there is such disparity between us and him so far as relates to education and resources, even now we fear not a comparison in the condition of education in the last eight years between the whites and the blacks of North Carolina.

The gentleman, moreover, states that the reason why they did not educate the colored race was that the colored man was not ready. Not ready, Mr. Speaker; if I had that gentleman upon the floor, with my foot upon his neck, and holding a lash over him, with his hands tied, with him bound hand and foot, would he expect that I should boast over him and tell him "You are a coward, you are a traitor, because you do not resist me?" Would he expect me to tell him that when I had him down under my foot, with his hands tied and the lash in my hand lashing his back? Would he tell me that, in conscience, I would be doing justice to him? Oh, no, no! And yet such was the condition in which he had my race. Why, sir, the whipping-post, the thumb-screw, and the lash, were the great means of education in the South. These were the school-houses, these were the academies, these were the great instruments of education, of which the gentleman boasts, for the purpose of bringing these barbarians into civilization. [Applause.] When men boast, they ought to have something to boast of. When I boast, Mr. Speaker, I shall boast of some noble deed. I will boast not of the wrongs inflicted upon the weak; I will boast not of the outrages inflicted upon the indigent; I will not boast, Mr. Speaker, of lashing the weak and trampling under foot any class of people who ought to have my sympathy, nor will I reproach them for being ignorant, when they have been kept away from every means to educate them.

He says we are not ready for it. How long would it have taken us to get ready under their kind of teaching? How long, O Lord, how long! [Laughter and applause.] How long would it have taken to educate us under the thumb-screw, to educate us with the whip, to educate us with the lash, with instruments of torture, to educate us without a home? How long would it have taken to educate us under their system? We had no wives; we had no children; they belonged to the gentleman and his class. We were homeless, we were friendless, although those stars and stripes hanging over your head, Mr. Speaker, ought to have been our protection. That emblem of the Declaration of Independence, initiated by the fathers of the Republic, that all men are born free and equal, ought to have been our protection. Yet they were to us no stars of hope, and the stripes were only stripes of our condemnation.

The gentleman talked something, I believe, about buzzards or crows taking the place of our brave eagle. Sir, the crow would, I think, more beautifully represent the condition of the South now—the croaking bird, you know. They have been croaking ever since the rebellion came on, and they have been croaking against emancipation and the Constitution ever since. They are a nation of croakers, so to speak. Like the crow they are cawing, cawing, cawing, eternally cawing. [Great laughter.] Mr. Speaker, you will pardon me, for I did not expect to speak this morning.

The gentleman says the negro has done less for himself than any other race of men on earth; and he instances the German, the Irishman, the Scotchman, the Englishman, and the Frenchman, as having done something. But he forgets the men of those nationalities come from stations which are the proud, educated, refined, noble, advancing nations of the earth. He forgets that those nations of which he speaks, from which those men have sprung, have given, and are still giving, to the world some of the brightest minds that ever adorned the galaxy of human intellect.

But he tells us that the negroes never produced anything. Well, sir, it may be that in the gentleman's opinion negroes have never produced anything. I wonder if the gentleman ever read history. Did he ever hear tell of any persons of the name of Hannibal, of Hanno, of Hamilcar, of Euclid—all great men of ancient times—of Æsop, and others? No, sir; no; for that kind of literature does not come to North Carolina. [Great laughter.] It grows, it flourishes, on the free mountain peaks and in the academies of the North. That kind of literature comes to such men as Wendell Phillips, as Lloyd Garrison, as Charles Sumner, as Benjamin Butler, and other distinguished men, men of the North, men that are thinkers, men that do not croak, but let the eagle ever soar high in the conception of high ideas. They are ideas that belong to a free people; they are not consistent with or consonant with slavery. No, sir; they do not tell the negro of Euclid, the man that in his joy cried out "Eureka, I have found it;" no, that is not the language for the slave. No; that is not the language they teach by the whip and the thumb-screw; no, sir; it is not that.

But I must pass on. The gentleman says that the black men in the South, since emancipation and enfranchisement, have put bad men into office. Well, sir, that may be true, and I regret that we have put so many bad men in office. No one regrets it more than I do, but they were not colored men after all. [Great laughter.] They were not black men, those bad men in office, who have done so much to deteriorate the value of the country. Not at all. Why, sir, they did not elect our distinguished friend [Mr. VANCE] from North Carolina by black votes. They did not elect Mr. Holman, or a gentleman of some such name, in North Carolina. They did not run the State in debt. They were not the men who took the cash; they were simply mud-sills who did the voting, while another class of individuals did the stealing. That is the difference.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I beg to say that we did the best we could; and one of the results of our education was that we had been taught to trust white men in the South. We trusted them, and if they did wrong it was no fault of ours; not at all. I presume the gentleman who addressed the House to-day had some colored constituents who voted for him and sent him here. I will not dare to say, however, that he is a bad man. He may be one of the very best of men; but I think he has some very bad ideas, so far as my race is concerned. [Applause.]

The gentleman says that this is a white man's land and government. He says it has been committed to them in a sacred relationship. I ask in all conscience what becomes of our black men and women and children, to the number of five millions; have we no rights? Ought we to have no privileges; ought we not to have the protection of the law? We did not ask any more. The gentleman harps upon the idea of social equality. Well, sir, he has not had so much experience of that as I have had, or as my race have had. We have some objections to social equality ourselves, very grave ones. [Applause.] For even now, though freedom has come, it is a hard matter, a very hard matter, to keep sacredly guarded the precincts of our sacred homes. But I will not dwell upon that. The gentleman knows more about that than I do. [Laughter.]

The gentleman wishes that we should prepare ourselves to go to Africa, or to the West Indies, or somewhere else. I want to enunciate this doctrine upon this floor—you have brought us here, and here we are going to stay. [Applause.] We are not going one foot or one inch from this land. Our mothers and our fathers and our grandfathers and great-grandfathers have died here. Here we have sweated. Here we have toiled. Here we have made this country great and rich by our labor and toil. It is mean in you now to want to drive us away, after having taken all our toil for two hundred years. Just think of the magnitude of these gentlemen's hearts. After having taken all our toil for two hundred years; after having sold our wives and children like so many cattle in the shambles; after having reared the throne of great king cotton on our labors; after we have made their rice-fields wave with luxuriant harvests while they were fighting against the Government and keeping us in bondage—now we are free they want us to go away. Shame on you! [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, we are not going away. We are going to stay here. We propose to stay here and work out this problem. We believe that God Almighty has made of one blood all the nations upon the face of the earth. We believe we are made just like white men are. [Laughter.] Look; I stretch out my arms. See; I have two of them, as you have. Look at your ears; I have two of them. I have two eyes, two nostrils, one mouth, two feet. I stand erect like you. I am clothed with humanity like you. I think, I reason, I talk, I express my views, as you do. Is there any difference between us? Not so far as our manhood is concerned, unless it be in this: that our opinions differ, and mine are a little higher up than yours. [Laughter.]

The gentleman states that this idea of all men being created equal is a fallacy, announced some years ago by Thomas Jefferson, that old fool-hardy man, who announced so many ideas that have been woven into the woof of the nation, who announced so many foolish things that have made this nation strong, and great, and powerful. Sir, if he was in error, I accept the error with pleasure. If he was a foolish man, I would to God that North Carolina had been baptized in that foolishness about two hundred years ago. [Great laughter.]

The gentleman also states that if you pass this bill your power over the South will pass away; that the power of the republican party in the South will pass away. Sir, let me tell the gentleman that behind this bill are nine hundred thousand voters; that, like the warriors of the tribe of Benjamin, every one of them is left-handed and can "sling a stone at a hair's breadth;" that each will come up stronger and mightier and more infused with power than ever before when you pass this bill giving them their rights, as other men have them. They will come up as never before to the support of the republican party, and they will make the South a source of joy and gladness.

The gentleman also talks about the colored people deteriorating. Sir, who tills your lands now? Who plants your corn? Who raises your cotton? I have been in the South during the last ten years. I have traveled over the Southern States, and have seen who did this work. Going along I saw the white men do the smoking, chewing tobacco, riding horses, playing cards, spending money, while the colored men are tilling the soil, and bringing the cotton, rice, and other products to market.

Sir, I do not believe the gentleman from North Carolina wants us to go to Africa; I do not believe it. It was a slip of the tongue; he does not mean that the black people should leave North Carolina; not a bit of it. If they did you would see such an exodus of white people from that State as you never saw before, for they would follow them wherever they might go. [Laughter.]

Sir, we feel that we are part and parcel of this great nation; and as such, as I said before, we propose to stay here and solve this problem of whether the black race and the white race can live together in this country. I make the statement that I regard it as essential to their welfare and interests that they should live together in this country. Why not? I can see no reason why not, if they contribute their quota to the advancement of progress and civilization. Sir, the mechanics of the South are almost altogether colored people. The carpenters, the machinists, the engineers—nearly all the mechanics in the Southern States are colored people. Why can we not stay here and work out this problem?

I ask Congress to pass this bill for the reason that it would settle this question, once and forever. The gentleman says that he does not desire that the colored people shall be crowded into the schools of the white people. Well, I do not think that they would be harmed by it; some few of them might be. But experience has taught us that it is not true that great harm will come from any such measure. I think, therefore, that if we pass this bill we will be doing a great act of justice, we will settle for all time the question of the rights of all people. And until that question is settled there cannot be that peace and harmony in the country that is necessary to its success.

The gentleman says the colored people and the white people are living together now in North Carolina in amicable relations. I am glad for that admission, for he rounded off all that he had said before by that last sentence. He said that the two races could not live together, and yet at the close of his speech he says that the whites and blacks are now living in North Carolina in amicable relations. Sir, if they are so living now, why not hereafter? Will peace and good order be destroyed because all are to have their rights? Sir, I do not think so.

I close with this thought: I believe the time is coming when the Congress of the United States, when the whole nation, will recognize the importance of the passage of this bill in order to settle this question once and forever. I regard the interests of the black man in this country as identical with the interests of the white man. I would have that set forth so clearly and unmistakably that there should be no antagonism between the races, no friction that should destroy their peace and prosperity. I believe Almighty God has placed both races on this broad theater of activity, where thoughts and opinions are freely expressed, where we may grasp every idea of manhood, where we may take hold of every truth and develop every art and science that can advance the prosperity of the nation. I believe God designed us to live here together on this continent, and in no other place, to develop this great idea that all men are the children of one Father. We are here to work out the grand experiment of the homogeneity of nations, the grand outburst of the greatness of humanity, by the development in us of the rights that belong to us, and the performance of the duties that we owe each other.

Our interests are bound up in this country. Here we intend to stay and work out the problem of progress and education and civilization. I say to the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. ROBBINS,] and to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. HARRIS,] and to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] who discussed civil rights the other day, and to gentlemen from the other States, that we are going to remain in this country side by side with the white race. We desire to share in your prosperity and to stand by you in adversity. In advancing the progress of the nation we will take our part; and if the country should again be involved in the devastation of war, we will do our part in the struggle. We propose to identify ourselves with this nation, which has done more than any other on earth to illustrate the great idea that all races of men may dwell together in harmony, working out together the problem of advancement and civilization and liberty.

Mr. Speaker, we will drive the buzzard away; we will scare the crow back to North Carolina. We will take the eagle as the emblem of liberty; we will take that honored flag which has been borne through the heat of a thousand battles. Under its folds Anglo-Saxon and Africo-American can together work out a common destiny, until universal liberty, as announced by this nation, shall be known throughout the world.

NATIONAL FINANCES.

Mr. BIERY. Mr. Speaker, it is my desire to make some remarks upon the subject of the currency. It is true this House has listened to a very able speech to-day upon this question; yet as there are differences of opinion upon this subject, and as it is one of great breadth, there is no danger of exhausting it in one day.

I start out with this idea, that the volume of the circulating medium in use in the business of the country, as it now stands, is insufficient. In other words, that part of the currency which actually circulates must be increased in order to give prosperity to the industries of the country. By reference to the official figures, as set forth on page 11 of the Report of the Secretary of the Treasury, I find that the amount of United States currency is $388,424,649.23. Add to this the maximum national-bank circulation, $350,000,000, and we have the sum of $738,424,649.23 as the actual amount of our circulating medium.

If the whole volume of this currency were in circulation there might not be so much reason for complaint as to its volume. But from this circulation we must deduct the reserves held by the banks. The reserves held in redemption cities is $112,152,056. The reserves held in States and Territories amounts to $97,765,876. Thus we have a deduction of $209,917,932, leaving only an actual circulation of $528,506,717.23. Taking a population of forty millions, the gross amount would average only $18.25 per head, while the actual amount of available currency is only $13.20 per head.

By referring to the official figures, it will be found that in the year 1868 the average circulation in England, Ireland, and Scotland was $19.48 per head; in France, $25.05 per head. It is to be remembered that both England and France have a very dense population, and their business can be transacted very largely by business paper, and on the evening of the business day there is only an adjustment of balances. But in America we have a vast area of country and a great agricultural population, living far from banks and places where deposits can be kept, so that frequently men must keep hundreds of dollars in their pockets or in their houses. Taking these facts into consideration, in connection with our limited amount of circulation, it must be obvious to any man who has any knowledge of common arithmetic that our circulating medium is too small.

I beg to refer in this connection to another fact which increases the stringency of the financial difficulty under which the country is now laboring. I refer to the unequal distribution of the circulating medium. I hold in my hand a circular, by a gentleman from the South, the figures of which I believe are in the main correct. According to its calculations New England has of the national-banking currency $31.15 per head; the Middle States only $12.90; the Southern and Southwestern States only $2.98; the Western States, excluding California and the gold-paying States generally, only $7.11. This unequal distribution of the circulating medium, if these calculations be correct, adds, I say, to the difficulty of the present financial panic.

The aggregate amount of currency being about double that of the national-bank issue, the gross currency per head is about as follows: New England, $62.30; Middle States, $25.60; South and Southwest, $5.96; Western States, $14.22.

But proceeding on the basis ascertained from the official figures, giving only $13.20 to each person throughout the whole country, we may arrive at a conclusion as to the sufficiency of the present volume of currency sufficiently accurate for all practical purposes.

See how this must operate upon the great manufacturing interests of the Middle States. Take for instance Pennsylvania with her vast capital invested in iron-furnaces. Going along her rivers and streams in the eastern and southwestern parts, you scarcely ever get out of sight of smoke-stacks, where rolling-mill after rolling-mill is seen upon our lines of railway, where car-shops and machine-shops dot every valley, where every species of iron manufacture and other industrial pursuit is found. Tell me whether a circulating medium of $13.20 per head is sufficient to do the business of that State, where the investments of capital in manufacturing establishments must be so great?

Go from the eastern part of my State into my native county, where oil by millions of gallons is pumped out of the earth and sent to market, until this vast production has become one of the greatest commodities of national export. Consider the vast amount of money that must be required to carry on that business, and then say whether $13.20 per head is enough to do it.

Go to the inexhaustible coal-fields of the eastern, central, and western parts of the State, requiring many millions of dollars to operate them, and tell me whether $13.20 per head is enough to operate them.

Men tell us the currency is sufficient in volume. Let us see. Let us come back to a time when we had settled down to a safe peace footing—in 1868.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask that the House be brought to order; I wish to hear what my colleague is saying.

Mr. BIERY. I was about stating that coming back to July, 1868, at a time when we had settled down to a peace footing—at that time, when we had come down from a state of great inflation, as it is called, which existed at the close of the war in 1865, I find these figures, which are taken from official sources: We had at that time of Treasury currency, according to the report of the Treasurer, $444,196,262; of seven-thirties, which were convertible (and I will make the same remarks as to the balance of the table from which I am reading—and serving really as so much currency)—January 1, 1868, $240,291,300; in 3 per cent. certificates, June 30, 1868, $50,000,000; of national-bank notes, July 1, 1868, $291,208,264, of State-bank notes—for many State banks had not yet gone into the national-banking system—July 6, 1868, about $4,000,000; giving this country at that date a circulation of $1,033,395,826, averaging, on a population of 38,000,000, $27.18 per head.

At that time every species of business in this country was prosperous. Panics were not known at that time. It is true prices were a little higher, but they were coming down gradually. They had risen as a matter of necessity during the war, but they were lowering. It was finally conceived that this circulation was too high, and we must come down to specie payments. From one end of the country to the other certain men loomed up and commenced to cry specie payments; that the country was going to ruin unless it would come to a permanent specie basis of values; that these fictitious prices of real estate and every other commodity possible in the market could not be allowed in a country like this.

One of the best arguments, although of course it seemed foolish to everybody when it was made, in reference to specie payments, at the time when we had only about $140,000,000 of coin—gold I mean—in this country, with a currency of at least $700,000,000—the best argument, I say, I ever heard advanced, under the circumstances, about coming to specie payments, was advanced by the late editor of the New York Tribune, Horace Greeley, when he said that "the only way to resumption was to resume." These men kept on in their clamor in reference to the resumption of specie, and what was the course adopted? The course which the authorities finally adopted was the redemption of its convertible securities, which at the time served not only as a circulating medium, but as an instrument of flexibility, as my friend from Philadelphia [Mr. KELLEY] very cheerfully acknowledges.

At the time they adopted the course of redeeming these convertible securities they contracted the currency still more by throwing back into the vaults of the Treasury "greenbacks" at the rate of $4,000,000 per month, until $44,000,000 were thus retired. Contraction was the plan adopted in order to resume specie payment, and they pursued that course until last September, when they were overtaken by a storm. When these men were overtaken by the panic, which was brought about by their ruinous plan, they began to point their fingers at each other and said, "You did it; you did it." They began to seek as to what was the cause of the panic, the ruin of which, to the business interests of the country, has already resulted in enough to pay one-quarter of the bonded debt of the United States.

Go to my district, if you please, and mark there the furnaces which last spring and last summer and all along until September blazed forth their bright lights at night as so many beacon-lights on the way of prosperity. Look there at those stacks to-day—black, almost every fire extinguished. The rattle of the rolls in the rolling-mills is no longer heard; the trip-hammer is no longer heard beating the iron; and men with strong arms and willing hearts, who earn by the sweat of their brow the bread which feeds their wives and children, ready to work to-day, who cannot get employment, because the men who have their capital invested say they cannot get currency to pay their hands.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I beg to refer to a little incident here which will serve as an illustration of what this plan of contraction does in reference to our manufacturing districts. It is this:

One of our largest manufacturing companies had to resort to a certain species of order, or due-bill, for the payment of their hands, simply because they could not get the currency. They issued those orders in large quantities. When I was at home during the holidays one of their hands, a client of mine, came to me and said, "Can you take that order for a fee I owe you?" I said I would, and I took it for the fee in place of thirty dollars in money. Yet to-day not only men from the East, where they have, as I have shown, a largely preponderating amount of capital per head, but men on this floor from my own State, I am sorry to say it, advocate still farther contraction in the currency, and make the coming down to specie payments the great cry. I tell you, sir, that if you come down to specie payments by that road you will bring the United Statesinto the meshes of bankruptcy.

While this contraction was going on all the industrial interests of the United States increased a little over 45 per cent.; and in addition to that, the territory over which the circulating medium is spread has been almost doubled. Instead, then, of contracting the currency, if any change at all had been made it ought to have been increased in order to keep up with the advancement of the requirements of the nation.

It is argued by the contractionists that the late panic was brought about by speculation and overtrading. Now let us see who these speculators were. In the first place, we have large amounts of capital employed in the different manufacturing interests all over this land. As a general thing, those men must have every dollar that belongs to them, either as companies or corporations, for the legitimate uses of their business. They cannot afford to buy farms with their money and cut them up into lots and speculate in that way. They cannot afford to go to the stock-board and speculate with their capital there. Their capital is all employed by the legitimate wants of their business. That is one kind of speculation. In the next place we have thousands of men all over the large prairies of the West, whose business it is to plow the ground, put in the seed, to reap the harvest, and bring their wheat to market. That is another class of men who are engaged in this speculation. Then at the mills and the furnaces, to which I have referred, and in the manufacturing interests generally, there is a large class of people who labor from day to day, and from their daily toil and earnings they lay up a little, which they pay, at the beginning of every month, into a building association, which holds a mortgage on the little house in which they live, and which in a few years they will be able to pay for in that way. That is another kind of speculators that were engaged in these vast speculations bringing about the recent panic. Sir, these speculators of whom there has been so much said are a myth.

I propose, Mr. Speaker, a plan in order to increase the circulating medium, which would to a great extent give relief and do it speedily. The United States issues only 90 per cent. of circulating notes to the national banks; that is, for the amount of bonds which these banks respectively have deposited in the Treasury of the United States. I propose that the Government shall issue to these banks an amount of circulating notes equal to the amount of their bonds which they have on deposit. I am aware that I find certain gentlemen objecting to that plan. They will say it is not safe for the Government to issue circulating notes equal in amount to the bonds; because those bonds might depreciate and then the note-holder would not be paid in full for the amount of his note; also, that if national banks should go into liquidation, the attendant expenses would cause a depreciation of the notes unless protected by a reserve. The latter of these objections is readily answered by stating that the national banking law of 3d June, 1864, section 26, suspends the payment of interest to every bank, on its bonds, from the day it fails to redeem its circulating notes. The accruing interest then would be ample guarantee for all the expenses incurred by liquidation.

As to the other objection, let me say that those bonds have not sold under par for a number of years. They are quoted above par and considerably above par on the stock-boards every day, and those bonds will not go below par until the men who cry contraction shall have succeeded in crying down the solemn obligations of the Government of the United States as "a vicious currency," "an inflated currency," "a pledge which the Government never intends to redeem," "a fraud upon its face;" not until they have done that, and until they have added to that the prostration of all the material interests of this country that will put it in such a condition as to be unable to pay the taxes already imposed and current expenses of the Government; when the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States shall call for sums of money to pay arrears of Government expenditures not only in amounts of $40,000,000, but when he shall call for hundreds of millions, and call in vain, then, sir, it will be that even the Secretary of the Treasury will find it very difficult to get the gold to pay the interest on the bonds that are held by foreign bondholders. When all that shall be brought about, then both greenbacks and bonds will be below par, and will sink in one boat to the bottom—when no one will have your bonds or your greenbacks.

Sir, every man who argues in favor of further contraction, every man who opens his mouth and says we must resume specie payments by the road of contraction, contributes so much to the ruin of the finances of this country. I can respect the men who opposed us during the war. I can respect gentlemen who have, on the other side of the House, all along told us the day would come when your national debt would be repudiated—I would respect them to-day for standing with the contractionists and so going down by that road, because they would be at least consistent. But for men who have been standing with the party now in power, for men who, I believe, are honest and who mean right, but who are wrong in their judgment, now to clasp hands across "the bloody chasm," to shake hands with those on the other side, to drive this nation into ruin, I cannot comprehend what they mean.

Mr. SPEER. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BIERY. I will.

Mr. SPEER. Does he say that those who differ with him upon this question are prompted by a desire to ruin this country? or is it not in their judgment rather the course best adapted for its interests?

Mr. BIERY. I do not say that the men who differ from me are prompted by a desire to ruin the country. I said this, that every man who speaks in the interest of the resumption of specie payments by the road of contraction will aid in the ruin of the country; that is, in my judgment they will aid in accomplishing that result, and I believe my judgment is right upon this point.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Allow me to ask a question?

Mr. BIERY. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I want to know if the gentleman thinks that when the Government pays its debts in specie, as it has promised to do, that action will tend to the ruin of the country?

Mr. BIERY. If the Government were able to-day to pay its promises in gold, I would say that it would be a sad spectacle of a pretendedly honest Government not to do it. But my friend from Chester, [Mr. TOWNSEND,] and every other man who argues as he argues, might as well honestly confess that we have not gold enough to-day to pay our bonded debt or our greenbacks. You might as well come down to that at once, and say that we cannot do it. I think the pledge of the Government ought to be sufficient guarantee that every promise that has been issued by the Government will be performed in due time.

Sir, let us, if you please, go a little into the history of the greenback, and see what that much-abused "inflated currency" has accomplished, or rather has not accomplished. When the first issue of that kind of currency was put out your Treasury was empty. You had no money to pay your soldiers in the field. You had no money to buy equipments for your Army. You had no money to buy your horses for the service. You had no money to buy anything to further the successful prosecution of the war. But wise men took it into their heads to issue greenbacks; and what did they do?

Sir, you might have sent friend after friend down upon the bloody battle-fields, and each blue-coated boy there might have put his wife and children into that friend's care, and said to him, "When you go home, take care of them and see that they do not suffer." Yet there would have been a lingering doubt in the mind of that soldier that, because of other duties, those friends would not perform that mission. But when you sent the greenback to the soldier in the field, when you put into his hand that promise to pay, which is called by some a "fraud upon its face," and when he mailed it to his family, he was sure that that would take care of them while he was fighting the battles of his country. Sir, the greenback was one of the most potent weapons that the Union Army had during the long and bloody struggle through which this country passed. Ever since the issue of that luminous "fraud" it has been the only medium for the redemption of national-bank notes, for the discharge of your obligations to the Government; except national-bank notes, the only medium by which you have been enabled to keep out of the clutches of grasping creditors, inasmuch as the law recognized it as a legal tender. Sir, with these "frauds" you have paid and are now paying your honest debts.

Now men come here and join those who said at the time the greenback was issued that in a few years it would not be worth the paper on which it was printed. I recollect well when I saw the first greenback. It was on the Alleghany River, in the oil regions of Pennsylvania. I was standing by the side of one of my democratic friends, when a republican friend came up and showed us one of the new bills, a new sight to us—a one-dollar bill, I believe. We looked at it, and my democratic friend said, "In a few years that bill will not be worth the paper on which it is printed." I told him at the time he would see the day when he would be glad to exchange his farm for that kind of currency. That day has long since come.

Now, I hear men who stood with us in sentiment all during the late struggle, who have held and now hold the same sentiments upon other national affairs—I hear them proclaim in loud voices and eloquent terms that this greenback circulation is nothing but an inflated currency, and unless brought to a level with gold without delay, ultimate ruin will be the result.

I think there is no man here who has not a sincere desire to return to specie payments. The only thing we differ about is the road which we shall travel. If we travel by the road of contraction, I can see nothing but ruin ahead. But is that the only road? I maintain that before we can arrive at specie payments we must have a prosperous country; all the manufacturing, mining, agricultural, and commercial interests of the country must be in a flourishing condition. And as we produce only about $60,000,000 of gold per year, and as the interest on our bonded debt is in round numbers $100,000,000 annually, (of which by far the greater portion goes to foreign bondholders,) it will be seen very readily that so long as we depend upon our own gold we will not be able to resume specie payments permanently, unless we can so adjust our financial affairs as to fund our debt at a lower rate of interest.

We must turn the balance of trade with other nations permanently in our favor, but before we can come to a condition of prosperity, such as will warrant that, we must start our mills and our manufactories; we must give the western man a fair chance to bring his produce to market cheap; we must have our mines reopened and in a producing condition; we must bring home out of foreign hands our bonded debt, and let our own people here hold it at a lower rate of interest, say 3.65 per cent., which they are very willing and very ready to do, if you only give them a chance. Then, sir, when we shall have accomplished that, we shall return to specie payments by a very easy process.

Mr. SPEER. As my colleague has said that it will be a very easy thing for the Government to negotiate a new loan at 3.65, I wish to ask him why the Government, in negotiating its last loan at 5 per cent., was obliged to put it in the hands of the syndicate and have it taken in Europe?

Mr. BIERY. I will answer the gentleman. Put into this new bond a clause providing that it shall be convertible into currency at the pleasure of the holder, and you will see how soon your people will take it; while if you issue a long loan, and put it upon the syndicates and everywhere else, nobody will touch it. Let this bond be made convertible into currency on demand, and our people will take it very quickly.

Mr. SPEER. Is it not the universal experience of nations that long loans are taken at lower rates than short ones?

Mr. BIERY. I must decline to be interrupted further.

The fact is acknowledged by the Secretary of the Treasury on the nineteenth page of his Report for 1873, that under the present circumstances we cannot resume specie payments. He says:

> It is not possible to resume and maintain specie payments with so large an amount of notes in circulation and so small an amount of gold in the country.

I take this to be conclusive on that point. Hence I say we must travel another road. The plan I propose would give us at once a loosening of the reserves of $138,310,661. This amount of money alone, thrown into circulation, will ameliorate very much the present condition of things. In addition to that, I would favor the plan advocated by my distinguished colleague from Philadelphia, [Mr. KELLEY,] of issuing three sixty-five convertible bonds. I may, perhaps, dissent from that portion of his plan relating to the volume. I might desire to limit the volume to a certain amount, say to the amount of the indebtedness of the United States for the time being. This would overcome one objection to his plan, which is, that by issuing an unlimited number of three sixty-five bonds the debt of the United States might be doubled, and in this manner the Government would make nothing by paying interest at the rate of 3.65 on double the present amount of its debt. Still, as my colleague has studied this subject more extensively than I have, and understands it better than I do, I will not undertake to dictate to him.

Mr. KELLEY. If my colleague will allow me, I will say that at the close of his remarks I propose to endeavor, in a friendly way, to remove the objection of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUNDY] to the plan now under consideration, and I will answer my colleague's objection at the same time.

Mr. BIERY. I thank the gentleman for his proposition.

Mr. Speaker, it is very frequently urged that the national banks should be prohibited from paying any interest or premium on deposits or current balances. Now, while that might prevent the flow of money to large money centers, such as Wall street and other places, I apprehend that it would operate injuriously to the banks themselves, and it would do it in this manner: the moment you restrict a national bank from paying interest on deposits or current balances, that moment you give every State savings-bank, every private banker, every broker-shop, an advantage over the national bank. You cannot reach these, except, perhaps, by a tax on their deposits; and so long as they are not prohibited by heavy taxation, they will pay interest on deposits and current balances. Hence, in the eyes of many people, they would be at a premium in comparison with the national banks. I would, say, give the national banks these three sixty-five convertible bonds, and let them hold them instead of their present greenback reserve, thereby loosening that part of the greenback circulation. I would issue these three sixty-five bonds in such number as to make them an instrument of flexibility; so that any one having a little money to deposit for a short time may buy them, and hold them until such time as he may need the money.

There is one provision, however, which I think ought to be made in reference to the national banking system. It is not unfrequently the case that there is intimately associated with a national bank a broker's shop, conducted either by individuals interested in the bank or perhaps by the directors, though I do not mean to make any such charge positively. By proper and potent penalties, I would prohibit any director or any one who can control the deposits of a national bank from engaging in a private broker's business in connection therewith; so that when men come to a bank, and ask for a loan, they shall not be put off with the statement "We have no money, but perhaps they have some over there."

By loosening the reserve and issuing the three sixty-five convertible bonds, I believe that in a very short time business would revive, and revive permanently.

One of my colleagues, in conversation with me the other day, remarked that the currency was redundant at the present time, as was shown by the fact that it is so very cheap in New York, Philadelphia, and elsewhere. Why is it that the currency seems redundant? For the redundancy is only apparent. The reason the currency seems redundant is because of the great amount of money that is not employed to-day, as it would be employed in our productive industries if they were in their normal condition of activity. Give a guarantee to the manufacturer, to the merchant, to the miner, and to those in other industrial pursuits, that you will not have another lock-up next fall; make such provision that when the produce of the West is to be moved the currency shall adjust itself to the demands of business, and you will see how long currency will be redundant in the city of New York or Philadelphia. The men engaged in business pursuits will take that currency and make it do its legitimate work in the productive industries of the country.

What use was there in having a panic about the 1st of last September? Who would have dreamed four weeks before, nay, two weeks before it occurred that there would be a panic in a few days, when every manufacturing interest of the country was at work, when every mine was being pushed to the extent of all the resources it had, when the whole country was in a condition of prosperity, greater perhaps than it had ever known before, when the West had crops, superior in amount to any it had raised for years, when there was plenty and prosperity everywhere; what cause, would any reasonable man ask, was there for a panic? Yet, as with a thunder-clap, it came down upon the whole nation and prostrated the industries of the land.

Give us a currency which will adjust itself to the business interests of the country; that, when the people require it, they can get the money requisite to carry on their business—not in a one-handed way—not at the rate of 50 per cent. of its capacity. Give us a currency which will measure the value of the demand of the whole business interest of the country; and in twelve years hence we will have followed in the same track, in reference to which my friend from Ohio [Mr. BUNDY] spoke this morning. In the next twelve years we will see this country shall have done more than it did during all the previous years of its existence.

Sir, the vast mineral resources of Missouri, Indiana, Kentucky, Tennessee, Upper Alabama, and Georgia, all those vast mineral deposits, have not yet been touched. The iron mountains in Missouri have, to be sure, a few small stacks at their feet, but they are few in number to what they ought to be. There ought to be a city with a hundred smoke-stacks and furnaces smelting that iron ore. Lately they have discovered block-coal in Indiana, which is used in smelting iron ore, and they take it out in measurably large quantities, I believe. They ought to take it out in larger quantities. You ship thousands and thousands of tons of iron and copper ore from the mineral regions of Michigan. You ought to ship from 100 to 500 per cent. more than you do now. And when the vast prairies of the West begin to have furnaces blazing all along their streams, with locomotive works, car-shops, and boiler and machine shops, and every other description of manufactures, then western men will scold us eastern men no longer on account of cheap transit. Then the men of the West will begin to see the value of having furnaces and iron-works of every character, with thousands of laborers to consume their agricultural products at home. The land in the valley in which I now live not many years ago sold at thirty dollars an acre. Now go there and see the change. Land, not in the city, but out in the country, farming land, is held at from $150 to $500 an acre. And why? Because we have manufacturing establishments in great numbers. We used to sell the grain raised in our county, and send it away to market elsewhere. What do we do now? We not only consume all the grain we raise there, but we have to import grain from the West to feed the men who work in our factories and mines. That, sir, is the result which has been produced by manufacturing industries in my district, and they will produce the same results precisely elsewhere.

But, Mr. Speaker, in order to carry them on we must have more money, What we want, sir, is currency. Every day the leading business men in my district, who have thousands upon thousands of dollars invested in iron furnaces and other iron-works, write to me and ask: "What are the prospects for more money?" All I can say in reply is that there are so many different opinions here that it is hard to tell. What they want is, not only action in the right direction, but speedy action. Shall we have it? I hope the committees which have appropriate bills under consideration will hasten the day which will bring this House to a direct vote on that question by yeas and nays. Let us come to it and decide what we are going to do.

I heartily thank the House for the very kind attention with which they have listened to me.

FINANCE.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I listened with profound interest to the remarks of my friend from Ohio, [Mr. BUNDY;] and rise now to make a suggestion or two in connection therewith, not in the way of dissent, but in the hope of elucidating two points on which he said he entertained doubts. So grateful am I to him for the expression of the true foundations and limitations of currency, and of the true laws of finance, that I could not speak at this time if my words were to imply dissent from his premises or argument.

One point on which the gentleman expressed doubt was the question of local and State taxation, as to how far these might be affected by the substitution of greenbacks for national-bank notes. It occurred to my mind as he spoke that he was under a slight misapprehension. It was this: that if greenbacks were substituted for national-bank notes, the banks as corporate institutions would go out of existence, and that their capital might be withdrawn from the community in which it is now employed. Neither of these results would, I apprehend, occur. The capital, should it be withdrawn from banking, belonging to the county or the locality in which the bank exists, would be embarked in other pursuits equally subject to taxation. But, sir, I apprehend that were the change made, were we to make our currency uniform by giving effect to the principle which the leading minds of England now claim to be her right and duty, namely, to stamp all the money of the realm with the impress of the government, and thus give to the government and the people the profits resulting from its issue instead of giving them in that country to the Bank of England, and in this to the national banks—were that great change effected, the banks would be relieved from the tax on circulation, which is the only distinctive tax they pay as national banks. The taxes levied on their property, on deposits and other sources of profit, are levied on private banks and State banks by the same provisions of law. They would, therefore, in banking on greenbacks be released from the tax on circulation, and would have a larger amount of currency with which to discount paper than they now have. The proposition involves no hostility to banks.

For instance, they now have but 90 per cent. of the par value of their bonds in bank-notes. They would then, by the sale of their bonds, have 15 per cent. above their par or face value, that being the current price of the bonds in the market; so that each bank having been released from the tax on circulation would have $115 of active banking capital where it now has but $90. I apprehend, therefore, that every national bank would take to doing business as State and private banks now do. There would then be no national-bank notes, our currency would be uniform, and there would be no legal demand for a reserve with which to redeem bank-notes. The Government would not require banks to hold a reserve of greenbacks with which to redeem greenbacks, and the law of reserve would be simply the law of sound banking. Each bank would hold only an amount of currency sufficient in the judgment of its officers to meet its current liabilities to depositors.

Again, sir, should we issue the three sixty-five bonds, the reserve would probably be larger, and more amply secure depositors, than it has ever done, and for this reason: A reserve, whether of gold or legal-tender paper, is unprofitable, as it lies dead and unproductive in the vaults of the bank. The officers of banks are therefore constantly tempted by their own interests and the demands of customers to draw unduly upon their reserve. If, therefore, banks and bankers could hold three sixty-five convertible bonds which should be in fact the equivalent of currency upon the instant in every city in which there is a sub-treasury, and also be available as domestic exchange, as they would be, between all parts of our country, they would be receiving a profit upon their reserve; it would no longer be dead capital but be productive, and they could therefore afford to and would hold a larger reserve than is now usual, and give more absolute security to their depositors than has been given by any system of banking that has ever prevailed within the limits of our country.

I come now to a question not raised by the gentleman, which, as he stated, had been suggested to him by others, which is, cannot such bonds be manipulated by the capitalists of the country, or by the thieving gamblers of Wall street, whom no law or principle of honesty has ever restrained? This question is a pregnant one. The practices of these men cannot be too severely denounced. They have stolen greenbacks and gold, and stocks and bonds, as the Erie Railroad was stolen. The morality that prevails among such pious men as Daniel Drew, and Cornelius Vanderbilt, the founder of a Methodist University somewhere in the South, and their associates, is, as I have elsewhere said, so false and selfish that it would be spurned by most of the inmates of the penitentiaries of the country; and yet their manipulations of the stock and gold exchanges affect the value of corn and cotton in the field and of coal and ore in the mine, and every species of property throughout the country. That class of capitalists would if it were in their power manipulate these bonds, when issued, I have no doubt. But can they do it? I think not; and in assigning my reasons for this opinion, I address myself also to the query of my friend and colleague from the Lehigh district [Mr. BIERY,] who inquired whether the provisions of the bill I had the honor to present should not embrace a proviso to the effect that the debt of the United States should not be increased by issuing more three sixty-five bonds than the present total of gold-bearing bonds. Though I believe such an event to be impossible, I may say in passing that I see no objection to inserting such a provision in the bill.

I turn now to the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BUNDY.] There are at this time at least $250,000,000 waiting to be handed to the Government in exchange for three sixty-five bonds.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. Allow me to ask the gentleman if that indicates a scarcity of currency?

Mr. KELLEY. I will tell you what it indicates. It indicates the condition of health shown by the falling man, who with flushed cheeks and swollen eyes drops speechless upon the pavement as he walks. His hands and feet are cold and numb, and his limbs are bloodless, the circulation having gone to the brain or the heart. Sir, the banks are now gorged with unemployed currency, because the limbs of industry are paralyzed; the forge and furnace glow no longer, and the loom and the spindle give shelter to the spider, that instinctively seeks a quiet corner in which to spin and weave its web. The toiling man who had earned from two dollars to five dollars per day in productive industry is eating the bitter bread of idleness and charity, and his unemployed boys and girls seek their food at the door of the soup-house. Give them employment and wages by putting into circulation a sufficient volume of money to animate the industries of the country, to rekindle the fires in your forges and furnaces, and to employ the one hundred and ten thousand idle laborers in the State of New York, and the forty-odd thousand in Philadelphia, and you will find that there will be no large accumulation of money in the banks of either New York or Philadelphia. It will then go into circulation.

Mr. DAWES. I thought you were going to put $200,000,000 of it in the Treasury.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. Allow me——

Mr. KELLEY. I had rather not be interrupted now. We will soon have general discussion on the subject. I am answering questions already, and would like some of the contracting bullionists, some of the extortionists, who are in favor of sweeping the accumulated earnings of the poor into the coffers of the rich, to come forward, as I have done on another occasion, and offer themselves to be catechized. When they shall do this, I will guarantee that they will not want more than three or four of their antagonists to question them at a time. I am content with two—my colleague, [Mr. BIERY,] and the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BUNDY.]

Mr. DAWES. Suppose you answer a question once; I will put a question to you.

Mr. KELLEY. I am trying to answer the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BUNDY.] When I shall have done that I will be glad to hear the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] demonstrate that he can give employment to idle people by further contraction of the currency.

Mr. DAWES. Well, what I want——

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, when I shall have done I will await the gentleman's demonstration; but for the present I decline to yield to him, or be interrupted by him.

Mr. DAWES. Then just answer his question.

Mr. KELLEY. When the gentleman gets the floor let him put his question. When he shall establish his right to guardianship over me, he may then instruct me as to what question I must reply to, and with whom I may talk, and from whom I must keep apart.

Mr. DAWES. Well, just answer Mr. BUNDY's question.

Mr. KELLEY. But, sir, the gentleman has no more a supreme right on this floor than, as I said the other day to another gentleman, he had. And I assert to him, as I did to that gentleman, that there are men on this floor who have a right to be heard, though they were born and brought up outside of New England.

Mr. DAWES. That is not fair and civil.

Mr. KELLEY. I have exhausted all fair and courteous means of securing my right to proceed.

Mr. DAWES. Give me a moment to set myself right; that is all I ask.

Mr. KELLEY. I proceed to the question I was considering; can such bonds——

Mr. DAWES. Allow me to set myself right.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have said to the gentleman that I decline to be interrupted by him, and I again decline. I have some rights as well as he, and I am going to maintain them. I did not meddle with him, and he shall not impose his will upon me.

If there shall be $250,000,000 of these three sixty-five bonds issued, or if there shall, as I believe there will, be $500,000,000 of them issued within one year from the time they may be promulgated, I want to know what combination of speculators will be strong enough to manipulate or corner them. The banks cannot invest $300,000,000 or $500,000,000 in them, and the combinations of Wall street are exhausted by fifteen or twenty millions of dollars. If banks, bankers, or speculators should under such circumstances attempt to hoard or corner either greenbacks or bonds, what would be the result? Why, sir, when money became more scarce than usual—for that would be the object of hoarding them—other holders of the bonds would carry them to the Treasury and have them redeemed, and thus greenbacks, instead of being applied to the purchase of 6 per cent. bonds, would replenish the circulation, and they who had invested $5,000,000, $10,000,000, or $15,000,000 in the attempt to corner them would find themselves in the vocative. The cardinal merits of the convertible-bond system are the low rate of interest at which they will be taken in consideration of their convertibility, and the fact that they would preclude the possibility, of corners, by which the business of the country has been so frequently and so disastrously affected.

The larger the volume of these bonds within the limits of our indebtedness the less practicable would it be to manipulate them or the currency. The more widely they should be distributed over the country the less practicable would it be to control them. For if the lock-up were attempted in Wall street the banks and insurance companies, finding that a high rate of interest prevailed, would send their bonds to the sub-treasury and get greenbacks for them. If the scarcity of money and high rate of interest prevailed in Chicago, or Saint Louis, or New Orleans, whoever held convertible bonds in those cities, whether merchant, bank, or banker, would send them to the sub-treasury and get greenbacks for them. And I again say in the existence of an interconvertible temporary loan you have an absolute guarantee against the possibility of a lock-up of the credit or money of the country in any of its forms.

I did not intend, sir, to speak so long as I have done; but being on the floor I proceed to strengthen one of the leading positions of my excellent friend from Ohio, [Mr. BUNDY.] He exhibited some striking proofs of the fact that we have not currency enough for the cheap and safe transaction of the legitimate business of the country. Before this system of contraction, which has involved so many of our best people in ruin, began, we had no other currency than greenbacks and national-bank notes. The credit system had almost disappeared from the interior districts of the country. Workmen were no longer sent to stores with orders and compelled to buy what the store-keeper might have at his price, but received their wages in money, and bought where they could buy cheapest and most agreeably to their tastes. The farms of the country had been freed from mortgage and judgment to a greater extent than ever before or than is now the case, and the prevailing rate of interest was low. The business of the country was then conducted so largely on a cash basis that the discounts in the banks ran down to such an extent that one-half of their investments were in Government securities; indeed, in default of business paper in which to invest their means, they held at the close of 1865 one-fourth of the national debt of the country. How is it now? There is now practically no currency accessible to the masses of the people. Workmen—the relatively few who are employed—are paid in orders on stores, and most of the business of the country is transacted on credit. The national banks on the 12th of September last had swollen their discounts to $944,220,000; and while, on the 1st of October, 1865, they held $189,988,000 of reserve to a total of discounts of $487,170,000, they had, on the 12th of September, 1873, a reserve of but $113,132,000, with discounts amounting, as I have said, to $944,220,000.

I have heretofore said on this floor that in proportion as you contract the currency—the current money of the country—you compel an expansion of the credit system and erect an inverted pyramid, standing on its apex, and with its broad, inverted base so ill-balanced that it must ere long topple over and bring ruin to the business of the country. I propose to illustrate this truth by adding to the proof adduced by the gentleman from Ohio.

In the report of the Comptroller of the Currency, on pages 44 and 45, I find under the title "shin-plasters" this statement:

> In my last report I called the attention of Congress to the issue of bills of credit by the State of Alabama, which issues are prohibited by section 10, article 1, of the Constitution of the United States; and also to the issue of unauthorized currency by various corporations in the South, and the necessity of legislation to prevent this abuse. The issue of such unauthorized currency is increasing in various directions. Railroad corporations in the Southern States had been issuing, for some years past, notes for circulation, of different denominations, many of which are similar to the following:
>
> $10.] CENTRAL RAILROAD BANK, SAVANNAH, GEORGIA.
>
> Fare-ticket, X.
>
> Good for the fare of two passengers one hundred and twenty-five miles.
>
> The Central Railroad and Banking Company of Georgia, Savannah, December 1, 1871.
>
> ——— ———, President.
>
> Superintendent.
>
> I am informed that these issues are redeemed by the railroad company, and that quite extensive arrangements are being made by manufacturing companies and corporations to issue similar devices. Such circulation is also being issued by the mining corporations of Lake Superior, and by Zion's Commercial Co-operative Institution in Salt Lake City. Similar issues are also made for circulation in the State of Maine, which purport to be drawn on (or by) parties residing at Saint Stephen, New Brunswick. Issues of this character will be likely to increase in the present anomalous condition of the currency, unless Congress shall legislate them out of existence by inflicting such penalties, or assessing such taxes, as will deter the corporations in question from engaging in such illegitimate practices.

But, sir, suppose Congress were to legislate those issues of unauthorized currency out of existence, would that remedy the evil, which is far more wide-spread than the Comptroller indicates? Here is a one-dollar note of the Phœnix Copper Company, of Phœnix, Michigan. How many of them are in circulation I cannot tell. It reads as follows:

PHŒNIX COPPER COMPANY.

PHŒNIX, MICHIGAN, June 28, 1873.

Three days after date, without interest, for value received, the Phœnix Copper Company promise to pay to bearer, at the office of the treasurer, in Boston, one dollar.

F. G. WHITE, Agent.

B. 1083.

Let me read you this other obligation, which is like unto it:

No. 271.] THE SAGINAW MINING COMPANY.

A. G. Slone, Secretary.

ISHPEMING, MICHIGAN, April 11, 1873.

Pay to George Pelmear, or bearer, one dollar, value received, and charge to the account of

J. P. MITCHELL, Agent.

To the CLEVELAND ROLLING-MILL COMPANY,
Cleveland, Ohio.

Here is another, from a point nearer to my home, and shows the want of currency in the region of country between Philadelphia and New York.

[No. 50, E.]

NEWTOWN, November 20, 1873.

PHILADELPHIA, NEWTOWN AND NEW YORK RAILROAD COMPANY:

Six months after date pay to James H. Sellers & Co., or bearer, one dollar, and charge to our account.

JAMES M. SELLERS & CO.

To CHARLES WILLARD, Treasurer Philadelphia, Newtown and New York Railroad Company, Newtown, Bucks County.

Accepted November 20, 1873. Payment secured by a deposit of first-mortgage bonds with Newtown Banking Company.

CHARLES WILLARD,
Treasurer.

Now, sir, suppose we can so legislate that the laboring man at Ishpeming or Phœnix, Michigan, shall not be paid in one-dollar drafts on Boston, Massachusetts, or Cleveland, Ohio, shall we thereby restrict the system of private credits by which they are so often defrauded? By no means. Why, then, should not greenbacks take the place of these private issues? To compel their withdrawal without such substitution would be to further contract the currency. Why should private firms and corporate companies have the advantage of issuing these notes, and the profit resulting from their loss or destruction, to the exclusion of the national currency, which bears the imprint of the Government, and the redemption of which is secured by the credit of the nation and the property of the people?

But, sir, could we perform the miracle of preventing such issues while withholding an adequate amount of lawful money from the people we would not have reached the root of the evil inflicted by the contraction of the volume of legal currency. I have here a letter which I received by yesterday's mail, which shows that under the infernal contraction policy we have pursued, and which gentlemen would press still further, the few laboring men who now find employment are handed over, bound as with gyves, to the money-lenders and credit-mongers of the country. It is from as reputable a citizen as there is in Philadelphia, and it illustrates fully the condition of the best classes of working people in that vicinity. It presents the statement of James Corr, who is in the stone, lime, and coal business. I will read the whole communication:

> I sold Serrill $120 worth of coal and lime, $75 each; took for them two dry-goods orders, $75 each. These I handed to Mr. Beatty for stone. Beatty passed them off to his men who quarry for him, first getting the orders accepted and divided into small amounts to suit the wants of the men. I sold John Geisse the stone, and took orders on groceries for 90 per cent. of the bill; the rest in money.
>
> PHILADELPHIA, January 21, 1874.
>
> Hon. WILLIAM D. KELLEY:
>
> DEAR SIR: I have just written the above from the lips of James Corr, a man who has been a gardener in my employ for the ten years previous to the last two. Since then he has been in the stone, lime, and coal business, and neither he nor those he deals with can get a discount in bank, mainly because the money business is a monopoly. Do not let any one delude you with the idea that money is plenty. It is not with this class of people, and they are the ones who create our wealth.
>
> What a picture that is of James Corr, and yet a majority of our laboring men do the same. Of course labor loses by such changes, because of the risk and uncertainty.

Who among us shall be ingenious enough to devise a statute that shall prevent ill-clad or starving people from toiling for these orders, and getting what they can for them, or those upon whom the orders are drawn from taking advantage of their necessities? Why, in the name of humanity, I ask, shall we not emancipate the laborers of the country from thralldom like this by issuing currency enough to reanimate the business of the country and give employment to its industrious but idle and suffering millions, and by making that currency interconvertible with three sixty-five bonds prevent the recurrence of such crises as that which has caused the misery they are enduring?

Mr. DAWES. I do not rise to discuss the pending question, but for quite another purpose; to put on record my surprise at the temper of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] and my wonder as to what food he feeds upon. I do not set myself up here, nor have I anywhere else, as a teacher of the science of finance; and it is perhaps for this reason that I do not understand the manner of those who do. I have sat patiently in another place and heard the gentleman four long days. I was invited by him to come here last Saturday to hear him, and to put such questions to him as I pleased.

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman is a little mistaken on that point.

Mr. DAWES. I came here and spent as much time as I could. I regret that I did not take warning to-day from the fate of those who came here then upon a similar invitation, and who ventured to put questions to the gentleman. I was invited a few moments ago, as I was about to leave this House, to stay and hear the gentleman; and when I ventured, very respectfully, here in my seat, to suggest to him I would like to have him answer a question put to him, the manners of the teacher came down upon me; and I have only to put upon record my astonishment, and my satisfaction that I do not feed upon any such meat as he does. When I set myself up here as a teacher on this subject, and undertake to say to people they do not know anything about it, it will be quite time enough for me then to be lectured by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that I come from New England, and, therefore, have no right to put any interrogatory to him.

Sir, I have not occupied one minute's time of this House on this question. The gentleman had an hour and a half last Saturday, and I do not know how much more this Saturday. I always sit patiently, and I always learn when I listen to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I do not always agree with him; I sometimes put inquiries to him for the purpose of hearing him remove the doubts I have. If the gentleman serves notice on me now that all I have to do is to sit still while he talks and not question anything he may utter on this floor, why then I shall take such course as will best comport with my idea of duty.

The gentleman suggested to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] that there were $250,000,000 waiting to be invested in his three sixty-five bonds, when the gentleman from Connecticut responded, "Does that indicate any lack of currency?" The gentleman went on and stated it was the condition of a man with the blood flowing from his extremities into his head and was dying of apoplexy, while his limbs were palsied. I ventured quietly, here in my seat, to ask him to give us the benefit publicly in the RECORD how locking the money up in the Treasury would send it back into the limbs. That was the head and front of the offense for which I have been lectured. Others, last Saturday, warned me, which I forgot, not to put interrogatories to the teacher.

Now, sir, if he had not consented, taking his own time, to have answered the interrogatory put to him, I should not have got up. Interrogatories which are troublesome to answer I find are an occasion for this treatment.

Sir, I have served a great while here with the gentleman from Pennsylvania. He has had no more patient listener to what he has said on this floor than myself. He has had no man upon this floor who appreciates his ability here or in the committee-room more than I do. He has had no man more cheerful than I have been to give him, here or elsewhere, the full credit of the measure of his ability, and I assume none of it myself.

I confess to an ignorance on this subject, and a desire to be taught. I have not attempted to teach any man whatever upon it. I have sat at the feet of all these men as an honest and sincere listener; and when I have a trouble about their doctrines and they invite me to put an inquiry, I object; and that is all I have to say to being treated in the manner I have been by the gentleman from Pennsylvania today, announcing here that if I put interrogatories I place myself in the attitude of thinking New England owns this House.

Sir, I claim no more upon this floor than the humblest member of this House. I sought no place in this House whatever. I have never asked to be assigned to any duty in this House whatever since I have sat here. I have humbly and modestly, as well as I thought I was able, discharged such duties as were devolved upon me by that Chair. I never had the idea I knew one-quarter as much as any other man on this floor on anything which ever came up. And I am not to be told I arrogate to myself, or to the section from which I come, that I own this House, or have the right to demand categorically from any man he shall answer my questions. If my friend from Pennsylvania does not want any questions put to him he has but to say to me, as one gentleman would say to another, he does not want them, and I will not trench upon his rights as a gentleman upon this floor.

Mr. KELLEY. If I have done injustice to my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] I am very sorry; because he cannot possibly hold me in higher esteem than I have held him during the more than twelve years that we have been associated on this floor. But, sir, I think the record will show that I protested at least four times against his interruptions. And I think the record also shows that during those twelve years respectful interruptions have been as acceptable to me as to any other man on this floor.

I remember one speech in which I replied to the interruptions of twenty-one gentlemen, and I believe that I was not charged with failing in courtesy to any of them. And I appeal to the gentlemen who were present last Saturday, to say whether I made any other protest than that the question should not be thrust upon me at an inopportune moment, and should be pertinent to the particular line of argument, and therefore not divert my thought.

I do not mean to recur to that. I believe that, had I fully apprehended the scope of the questions put to me by the gentleman who put them, I could have answered them in a single sentence, satisfactorily to myself and to him. Other gentlemen around me put numerous questions, and I do not think they found me unwilling to respond to them to the best of my ability. I took the floor to-day with no thought of making a speech, but with the simple purpose of accepting an invitation implied in the course of his remarks, which was repeated privately by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BUNDY,] to answer two difficulties in his mind. That was all. And when I declined four times to be interrupted, I think that should have been enough. If I had asked a gentleman a second time to allow me to interrupt him, and he had declined, I would not have persisted. I would feel I had been guilty of rudeness if, after a gentleman declined to be interrupted the first, then the second time, and then absolutely, I had still pressed my question upon him; and I should feel that, under such circumstances, he would be justified in using such language as would silence my tongue for the time being. And that is all I meant to do. I meant to express no disapproval of the long public career of the gentleman from Massachusetts. But I did feel, and do feel now, that having firmly said I declined interruption, the gentleman ought to have intermitted or omitted it. And I believe mutual apology, made as publicly as we can make it, will be the best thing; and that on Tuesday morning when we meet in the room of the Committee on Ways and Means we shall both have forgotten what has transpired to-day; for no measure of glory to be derived from his acceptance of me as his teacher, with the sublime humility he has exhibited to-day, would compensate me for the loss of his friendship.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I wish to say just a single word. I was not in the House at the moment the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] declined to be interrupted, and I was not aware that he had done so when I addressed my question to him.

TIMBER-PLANTING ON WESTERN PRAIRIES.

Mr. ARMSTRONG asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to have printed as part of the debates some remarks on the bill in relation to timber-planting on western prairies.

CUBA.

Mr. WALLS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to print as part of the debates some remarks on Cuba.

FORTY-FOUR MILLION LOAN.

Mr. MERRIAM asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to print as part of the debates remarks on the legality of the issue of the forty-four million reserve.

FINANCE.

Mr. MELLISH. With the permission of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KELLEY,] I desire to address one question to him.

Mr. KELLEY. I will answer the gentleman's question if in my power.

Mr. FIELD. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. COX. I wish to say one word about the experience we have had to-day, especially with respect to the performances in the gallery and on the floor of the House. I do this with the hope that hereafter no Saturday afternoons may be set apart for such an exhibition to the whole nation as we have had to-day. We have had a little unconsequential colored minstrelsy on the one hand, and a lot of useless personal explanations on the other. This is neither deliberation nor legislation. It does not help us forward in our duties; and I hope that from next week we will dispense with these Saturday afternoon sessions. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FIELD] already has the floor for the purpose.

Mr. MELLISH. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] has consented to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. KELLEY. I will be very glad if I can to answer any question the gentleman may put to me.

Mr. MELLISH. I want to state a simple proposition.

Mr. COX. I insist on my motion to adjourn.

Mr. MELLISH. If my colleague [Mr. COX] will allow me a moment to state a proposition, I think it may, perhaps, be deemed worthy of consideration by the House.

The plan will be to have five hundred millions of greenbacks out; then, that the Government shall loan greenbacks (from an additional supply thereof) to any person who offers United States bonds as security for the loan—100 per cent. on 6 per cent. bonds, and 90 per cent. on 5 per cent. bonds; interest to be paid on the loan at 7.3 per cent., payable semi-annually.

That is a proposition which I simply submit for consideration without committing myself to it. By this plan the speculators of Wall street, if they wish to operate with the currency, have got, in the first place, to possess themselves of United States bonds. That is an expensive operation. It would swamp even Jay Gould and all his confederates to attempt any dangerous operation in them. People who hold United States bonds are generally solid people, who do not go into such operations. The next thing is to withdraw currency after getting the bonds. This will swell the currency. That of itself is a more difficult operation than the whole transaction under the 3.65 scheme. And remember, that a sudden purchase of even a few millions of United States bonds in Wall street would put up the price and spoil the transaction. In the one case—under the 3.65 scheme—you shrink the currency, and then swell it; in the other you swell it, and then shrink it. Speculation, of course, is possible under this system. But it is not nearly so handy to bull stocks and then bear them, as it is to bear them and then bull them.

And now, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] will allow me, and the House will allow me, I would like to ask him a question. But I do not wish to trespass on the patience of the House.

Mr. COX. Although the gentleman from Pennsylvania should answer it, that would not make legislation.

Mr. RANDALL. Give him another week to answer it.

Mr. MELLISH, (amid considerable confusion and cries of "Let us adjourn.") I want to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if his scheme of three sixty-five bonds would not furnish the prettiest opportunity to the manipulators in Wall street? The gentleman will recollect that the Government had some difficulty with the Tenth

National Bank in regard to its attempt to lock up currency. Will not the effect of the three sixty-five bond scheme be this: that the Government itself will do what it sought to punish the Tenth National Bank for doing? Suppose a combination in Wall street should put $10,000,000 or $15,000,000 in a pool, take it to the Treasury and turn it into three sixty-five bonds, does not that contract at once the currency to that extent? Stocks go down, and then these speculators, when they have succeeded in getting Government and other stocks down low enough to suit them, take their three sixty-five bonds to the Treasury and change them into currency with which to buy stocks at low prices. Does not the Government thus aid them to tamper with the currency? And will not the effect——

Mr. KELLEY, (interrupting.) If the gentleman will allow me to answer his first three questions, I will then stay here with him alone and answer the rest, while the House can adjourn. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPEER. Is it in order to move that five thousand extra copies of these interrogatories be printed for the use of the House?

Several MEMBERS. Let us adjourn.

The motion to adjourn was agreed to; and (at four o'clock and ten minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday next.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Petitions, memorials, &c., were introduced and referred under the rules as follows:

By Mr. BURCHARD: The petition of Samuel Stewart and other soldiers, for an act to equalize bounties to $3.33⅓ per month, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. NIBLACK: The memorial of the State Board of Agriculture of Indiana, against the extension of certain patents, to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. ROBINSON, of Ohio: The petition of W. B. Russell and others, asking for a modification of the stamp tax on drugs, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SMITH, of Virginia: The petition of J. B. Pointdexter, asking pension for services during the war of 1812, to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SPEER: The petition of citizens of Huntingdon County, Virginia, asking that the duty on tea and coffee be not revived, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. THORNBURGH: The petition of Gilbert Reed, for pension &c., to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, January 26, 1874.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of Friday last.

Mr. MORTON. If there are no Senators desiring to hear the Journal read, I suggest that the reading be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana moves that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with. The Chair hears no objection, and the reading is dispensed with.

REMOVAL OF POLITICAL DISABILITIES.

On motion of Mr. NORWOOD, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 133) to relieve Thomas Hardeman, jr., of Georgia, of his political disabilities, was considered by the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GORDON. I move to amend by inserting after "Georgia," in the fifth line, the words, "and William L. Cabell, of Dallas, Texas."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to relieve Thomas Hardeman, jr., of Georgia, and William L. Cabell, of Texas, of their political disabilities."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a letter addressed to him by William A. Booth, president of the Importers' and Grocers' Board of Trade of the city of New York, containing a preamble and resolutions adopted by the board, asking for the adoption of certain amendments to the bankrupt law; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a letter from William A. Booth, president of the Importers' and Grocers' Board of Trade of the city of New York, transmitting a revision of commissioners' draught, prepared under the auspices of the board, containing a large number of suggestions of amendments to the laws in regard to collecting the customs; which was referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I present the petition of Dr. David Murray, who left this country under a contract to attend to the educational interests of Japan; and of Horace Capron, formerly Commissioner of Agriculture, who left this country to attend to the agricultural interests of Japan; and of some 25 other citizens of the United States, and residents of Japan, representing that an indemnity was stipulated, by a convention of 1864, to be paid by the government of Japan to the United States for alleged damages suffered by American shipping at the Straits of Simonooski; that this indemnity proved to be largely in excess, so that after the liquidation of all claims properly chargeable against this fund a large unexpended balance remains in the possession of the United States, and that one-half of the indemnity yet remains to be paid by the government of Japan, and praying that the United States will remit the payment of the installments not yet paid by Japan, and will grant the unexpended balance now in the possession of the United States, with all the accrued interest, to Japan, to be used as a trust fund for the promotion of education in Japan.

In connection with this memorial, I have also a letter from Dr. Murray, stating that the ministers of Holland, England, and France, who are interested in this indemnity, have demanded that the second installment be paid, but that our minister has not made such demand, but has sent to the State Department for instructions; and also a letter from the minister of education in Japan stating that the Japanese government would be most happy to devote this fund to the purposes of international education. I move that this memorial and the letters be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. I present a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, it being a correction of a letter published in the book of revised estimates relating to appropriations; there being an error in the original that the sum of $2,000,000 is named instead of $1,500,000; and in the original the schedule letter referred to is omitted. I move that this letter be printed, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT presented the memorial of the Legislature of California, praying for the restoration of certain lands to the public domains; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. JOHNSTON presented the petition of H. H. Page and other citizens of Virginia, and the petition of George E. Prichett and other citizens of Virginia, praying for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, its relations to pauperism, crime, the public health, and general welfare; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the memorial of 25 disabled veterans of the war of 1861, inmates of the National Military Home at Hampton, Virginia, asking Congress to pass a law equalizing the system of paying bounties, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BOREMAN. I present a petition of a number of citizens of West Virginia, calling attention to the fact that one of the piers of the railroad bridge that spans the Ohio River at Steubenville is in a leaning condition and unsafe for railroad purposes, and asking that measures be taken to secure a safe transit for passengers and freight over the bridge, and also representing that it materially interferes with the free navigation of the river. I move that this petition be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PRATT. I present the petition of William N. Denny, of Vincennes, Indiana, who represents that while holding a commission as captain in the Fifty-first Regiment Indiana Volunteers, and acting as major of that regiment, he was, on the 3d day of May, 1863, at Rome, Georgia, captured by the command of General Forrest and taken to Libby Prison, and detained there from the time of his capture until the 25th day of March, 1865, when he returned to his regiment, having made his escape; that his commission as major was received at his regiment on or about the 30th of June, 1863, but by reason of his capture and detention he was prevented from being mustered in as a major, in consequence of which his pay and emoluments as major have been retained by the War Department; that he received his pay as captain, but has not received the difference between the pay and emoluments of captain and major. He prays that an act may be passed by Congress authorizing and directing the War Department to allow and pay him the difference between the pay and emoluments of captain and major. I move the reference of this petition, together with the evidence accompanying it, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN presented the memorial of Jarvis Patten, grandson and heir and for the co-heirs of Robert Patten, deceased, praying to be indemnified for spoliations committed by the French prior to the year 1801; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. RAMSEY presented a petition of citizens of Minnesota, praying for the establishment of a post-road from Redwood Falls to Springfield, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Minnesota, praying for the establishment of a post-route between Anoka and Princeton, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented two petitions of citizens of Minnesota and Dakota, praying for the improvement of the navigation of the Red River of the North; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SCOTT presented a petition of citizens of Lycoming County, Pennsylvania, and a petition of citizens of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, praying for the redemption or conversion of the legal-tender notes, by issuing therefor, at the option of the holder, bonds payable on demand in legal-tender notes and bearing interest at some fixed rate, and suggesting 3.65 per cent. per annum; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. LOGAN presented a petition of the survivors of the war of 1846, 1847, and 1848, with Mexico, asking to be placed on an equality as to pensions with the survivors of the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WRIGHT presented the petition of Rev. A. S. Wells and other clergymen and citizens of Jefferson County, Iowa, for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic in its relations to pauperism, crime, the public health, and general welfare; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WINDOM presented a petition of citizens of Minnesota, praying to be protected in the possession of their pre-empted lands against the claim of the Winona and Saint Peter Railroad Company; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BAYARD presented the petition of Mrs. Annie Dorsey Reeves, of New Castle, Delaware, praying remuneration for the occupation of her property by United States officials; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented resolutions of the Board of Trade of the city of Wilmington, Delaware, asking for an appropriation for the improvement of the harbor of Wilmington; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CONKLING presented the petition of Andrew Wilson and other citizens of Brooklyn, New York, asking for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the memorial of Seth Driggs, praying for the enforcement of his claim against the republic of Venezuela; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, presented a resolution of the Board of Trade of the city of Portland, Maine, remonstrating against the repeal of the bankrupt act and praying that the same be modified; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SCHURZ presented the petition of August Mellon, praying to be allowed full pension and arrears of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPEAL OF BANKRUPT LAW.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. No. 792) to repeal the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved March 2, 1867, and all laws and parts of laws amendatory thereof, and which was reported by the committee on the 5th instant, to report for the information of the Senate certain modifications and further amendments which, upon consideration and hearing criticisms upon the state of the law, we have thought it advisable to recommend; and I move that they be printed, and placed on the Calendar, with the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

LAND CLAIMS IN MISSOURI.

Mr. BOGY. I am directed by the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1221) to confirm certain land titles in the State of Missouri, to report it back without amendment and recommend its passage. This bill has passed the House, is now in the Senate, and has received the approbation of the committee; and as it is a local bill of very great importance to a large class of persons, who claim this property and who have been in possession of it for fifty years, believing their title to be perfect, (indeed, it may be perfect, but there is a doubt about it,) I should like to have the bill put on its passage immediately, and so move.

There being no objection, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill.

The preamble recites that the Baron of Carondelet, governor-general of the Territory of Louisiana, did, on the 15th day of March, 1797, instruct Zeno Truedro, lieutenant-governor of the Territory, to place Moses Austin in possession of a league square of land at Mine à Breton, in that Territory; that Moses Austin did, in the year 1798, take possession of the land by moving upon it with his family, and did improve the same by building dwelling-house, blacksmith shop, furnace, and other improvements; that the lieutenant-governor did, on the 14th day of January, 1799, order Antone Lulard, surveyor in the Territory, to survey the land and put Austin legally in possession of the same, which survey, numbered fifty-two, containing seventy-one hundred and fifty-three arpents and three and two-thirds feet, was executed by Antone Lulard, and a certificate of the same filed by him in November, 1800; and that Don John Ventura Morales, then governor at New Orleans, did, in the year 1802, in the name of the King of Spain, grant to Moses Austin the lands so surveyed and located.

The bill proposes to release for the United States whatever title they have to said lands, now numbered 430 on the plat in the surveyor-general's office, and in townships 37 and 38, range 2 east, in the county of Washington, and State of Missouri, containing 7,153.32 arpents, (6,085.29 acres,) to the heirs, legal representatives, or assigns of Moses Austin, according to their respective interests therein. There is a proviso that the act shall not affect nor impair the title which any settler or other person may have acquired adverse to the title of Moses Austin to any portion of this land.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. SARGENT. I should like to have a further explanation of the bill before its passage. It recites that a land grant was made in Missouri of some six thousand acres in the last century, sometime in 1798, and that in 1800 it was perfected. Now, three-quarters of a century later, a bill comes in here to relinquish any title the United States may have to this land, saving the rights of the settlers who are upon it. I think it is worthy of explanation why so long a time has elapsed without this matter having been settled before; how many settlers there are on this land; and if the United States relinquishes any right which it may have, as the settlers can only claim through the United States, the United States title being gone, what protection or redress, or rather what form of action or in what tribunal, would the settlers have any rights which they may have protected? There are such settlers it may be assumed from the preamble of the bill, because they are mentioned, and it is said that their rights shall be protected. I believe it has been decided that a bare settler upon the public lands, under the pre-emption laws, has not a standing in any court—has not a sufficient connection with the title of the Government of the United States to be able to sue in his own right or to maintain an action in any United States tribunal whatever. If that is so, the proposition of the bill to protect them must be nugatory, because the very basis upon which their rights will stand is taken away, and that is the title of the Government of the United States.

I do not know that I shall object to the bill if it is satisfactorily explained; but it seems to me these points are worthy of the consideration of the Senate.

Mr. BOGY. I will explain the bill. The Senator from California misapprehends what I understand to be the law in a case of this kind. If settlers under the pre-emption laws have a right to this land, this bill does not affect their right, and they will have the power to assert their right in the courts.

Mr. SARGENT. I will inquire if the rights of these settlers have ripened into a patent from the Government of the United States?

Mr. BOGY. No, sir; I believe not.

Mr. SARGENT. If they have not that patent, I can show the Senator the decisions of the United States courts that short of that no right is conferred upon the settler which the United States may not take away from him or disregard. I will instance the case of the Yosemite grant. There had been a settler upon that grant for a dozen years before the United States conveyed it to the State of California, and that settler has ever since been endeavoring to secure his rights and has failed in all the courts, and has come to Congress, and Congress has not granted him any relief.

Mr. BOGY. That may be the law applicable to the grants of California, but the law in the State of Missouri is entirely different in regard to that. But be that as it may, I may state this fact: this grant was made, as stated in the preamble, in 1798, was surveyed in 1802, and has been in the possession of Moses Austin, and of those claiming under him, from that day to this. The claim was always believed to have been confirmed by the act of 1814. No lawyer in the State of Missouri had a doubt on that subject. I believe myself it was confirmed by that law. Yet a short time ago, within a year or two, the Commissioner of the General Land Office advanced the opinion that the act of 1814 did not embrace that concession, and therefore the title was not confirmed. This bill was introduced at the earnest solicitation of the entire body of the people who reside upon that land, as far as I know. There is no intention to deprive anybody of any right; but if there be any adverse right, if there be any person who claims adversely to this Spanish concession, that claim will be protected by this bill.

This bill passed both Houses of Congress at the last session and went to the President, but owing to the lateness of the hour at which it passed it was not signed. It is not intended to take anything from anybody. It is intended to quit persons who have been in possession of their property for seventy-six years, and who have claimed it in good faith. It has passed from A B to C D, as a complete title, from that day to this, and I believe, as a lawyer, the title is good; yet in that I may be mistaken. But we were careful to protect the rights of all adverse claimants, if any there be; and I know that according to the decisions in my State any person who has a pre-emption right, his right being anterior to the right which emanates now from Congress, would not be affected by this bill. If this be the origin of the title from the United States, a person claiming under the pre-emption act has an anterior right of which we cannot divest him, and his claim will be a legal one. That is the uniform decision in my State. And I state in my place here that I do not know a single person upon the entire claim who has an interest adverse to this bill. If there be one, I certainly am not aware of it.

The bill was passed.

Mr. BOGY. As a part of the same subject, I am directed by the Committee on Private Land Claims to report back the bill (S. No. 120) to confirm certain land titles in the State of Missouri and to move its indefinite postponement. This bill was introduced a few days ago by my colleague, [Mr. SCHURZ,] and relates to the same subject.

The bill was indefinitely postponed.

THE DISTRICT GOVERNMENT.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a motion to print a petition of citizens of the District of Columbia, praying for the appointment of a joint select committee to inquire into the management of the affairs of the District, and especially of the board of public works, have instructed me to report it back and ask to be discharged from its further consideration. I believe my colleague on the committee [Mr. SAULSBURY] does not agree with the report. I call his attention to it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I dissent from the report and desire that the memorial should be printed. A majority of the committee, however, think that it ought not to be printed. I will now simply say that I dissent from the report and hope the document will be printed.

Mr. ANTHONY. The reason why the committee report against printing the memorial is not on account of the character of the memorial, but because we uniformly object to printing memorials unless they come from large bodies. Memorials from the State Legislatures or from conventions called by order of the States are printed, as a matter of course; but the plan of printing all memorials offered would burden the office very much. It is also to be observed in regard to this particular memorial that there are certain very damaging allegations, charges of extravagance and corruption, made against public officers, and of course the proof of them is not in the memorial, although the petitioners allege that they have the proof. I have no reason to suppose that they have not, nor have I any reason to believe that they have; but it does not seem exactly right to print a memorial charging upon public officers damaging accusations unless there is some proof contained in the paper that makes the charge.

Mr. SAULSBURY. In desiring the publication of this memorial, I have no desire whatever to do anything that would be unpleasant to the gentlemen who are charged in the memorial with improper action. But it is a memorial in reference to a subject which we shall have to act upon. It is a memorial in reference to this District. We know that a claim will be presented at the present session of Congress for an appropriation of money to defray the expenses incurred by the board of public works of this District. This petition charges certain mismanagement in the affairs of the District by the board of public works. Now, I say that, according to my view, we ought to have all the information possible upon that subject before we vote for any appropriation. Here are gentlemen preferring a petition alleging mismanagement—I do not know to what extent they charge it, nor whether it is so much mismanagement as fraud—in the performance of duties intrusted to the board. They avow themselves ready to furnish the proof. I think, after the great complaint which has been made of the mismanagement of the affairs of this District by the board of public works, and especially as we shall be called upon to vote appropriations of money to defray the expenses which they have incurred, we ought to have in our possession everything that can give us information on this subject.

Mr. HOWE. Allow me to ask the Senator one question.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Certainly.

Mr. HOWE. The question is, what public, or private good, either, the Senator expects to subserve or promote by putting in print at the expense of the Treasury this petition or memorial, whichever it is?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not know that any public good would be subserved, further than that the information which it contains will be placed on the desks of Senators who will be called upon to vote supplies of money, and their minds might be directed by that to an investigation of the subject.

Mr. HOWE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him another question?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. The question is, whether he himself would be controlled or influenced in his vote upon any conceivable appropriation by such information as he could gather from this petition or any other petition?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Certainly, I would not be controlled by ex parte statements in relation to any vote which I was called upon to give; but I say that if this paper contains information which would cause me to investigate, if it specifies matters and directs my mind to certain specific matters to which it otherwise would not be directed, it is well enough that I should have the information, and it is well enough that the Senate should have the matter furnished, so that their minds may be induced to look at it.

I do not wish to do any injustice to the board of public works. I know nothing about their management of the affairs of this District except through rumor. Whether these rumors are true or false I do not profess to know; but as a Senator, called upon, as I shall be, to vote large appropriations of money to pay for work which they have done, I say it is my duty to investigate, to the full extent of the ability I possess, every allegation which is made; and before I cast my vote I desire to have all the information I can. If there has been mismanagement, misappropriation, of the public funds heretofore intrusted to their keeping, I should be the more chary about intrusting funds to their keeping hereafter.

I disclaim any intention or desire to do injustice to the board of public works, for I know nothing of the management of the affairs of this District except from common rumor; but I know that common rumor is rife that there has been great mismanagement of the public funds. I desired simply to make my statement that I was in favor of the printing of the memorial.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. What is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Reports of committees are in order.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Is there any question before the Senate?

Mr. ANTHONY. There is a motion to discharge the Committee on Printing from the further consideration of the motion to print this memorial. I agree fully with my colleague on the committee, that I am in favor of the most complete examination of all the allegations in the memorial by the proper committee—I suppose the Committee on the District of Columbia. But it has not been the habit to print memorials, and I do not think we ought to make an exception in favor of a memorial which makes very damaging charges without alleging any proof whatever.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish to say——

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Is there any question before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on discharging the Committee on Printing from the further consideration of the motion to print the memorial.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Is that subject to debate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. THURMAN. I was very indifferent whether the memorial should be printed or not, although I thought at the time, and still think, that it ought to be printed for the information of the Senate, that each Senator might see for himself what were the charges against the District government and the persons who make them. It was said that it would be printed in the newspapers, and therefore that there was no necessity for our printing it. It is a very curious fact, I believe, that it has not been printed in a single newspaper in the District. If it has, it has escaped my observation; but it was not for the public but for the Senate itself that I desired to have it printed. But if the committee are opposed to printing it upon some general principle, I shall not complain of that. At the proper time I shall move the Senate for the appointment of a committee, in accordance with the prayer of the memorial, to submit to the Senate such evidence as may be furnished by the petitioners in support of their prayer. I do not propose doing so at this stage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the committee being discharged from the further consideration of this motion? The Chair hears none, and the committee is discharged.

Mr. ANTHONY. The petition should be referred to the proper committee.

Mr. THURMAN. No; I do not want it referred now. I want it to lie on the table.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am content.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will lie on the table.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. LOGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 376) granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the war of 1846, with Mexico, and the widows of deceased soldiers and sailors; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STEWART asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 377) in relation to the public lands in the State of Nevada; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. STEWART. This bill is in accordance with a proposition of the Legislature of the State of Nevada with reference to the public lands in that State. The resolutions of the Legislature were referred to the Committee on Public Lands at the last session, and I suppose are now on the files. I move that they be withdrawn from the files and referred, with the bill, to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 378) to provide for the incorporation and regulation of railroad companies in the Territories of the United States; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Railroads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOWE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 379) for the relief of Nathan Cole, late captain Twenty-third Regiment Veteran Reserve Corps; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 380) to secure to the Episcopal Board of Missions the land in the White Earth Indian reservation in Minnesota; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MITCHELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 381) to create an additional land district in the State of Oregon, to be called the Dalles land district; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 382) for the relief of William L. Adams, late collector of customs at Astoria, Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SARGENT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 383) to forfeit to the United States certain lands granted to the Placerville and Sacramento Valley Railroad Company to aid in constructing a railroad from the town of Folsom to the town of Placerville, State of California; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. STEVENSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 384) for the benefit of the Louisville and Bardstown Turnpike Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move that the bill (S. No. 183) to provide for a survey and estimate of cost for constructing locks and canals to remove obstructions to the navigation of the Columbia River, in the State of Oregon and in Washington Territory, which was introduced some time ago, and which is lying on the table, be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

STATIONERY-ROOM.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Contingent Expenses be instructed to inquire into the expediency of excluding all articles from the stationery-room except paper, pens, pencils, ink, envelopes, and mucilage.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Mr. President, I should not have introduced this resolution but for the general scandal that seems to be circulating in almost every newspaper throughout the country in relation to the articles that are furnished to Senators from the stationery-room; and finding these charges indorsed in a paper so respectable as the Boston Daily Advertiser, I am induced to offer the resolution. For instance, the Daily Advertiser of January 13 contains a long article from which I will now read some extracts. After giving a list of the items as found in the report of the Secretary of the Senate, it proceeds to say:

Why these expenses augment from year to year may be discovered by a careful scrutiny of the items. It is because there is no limit to the class of articles that may be purchased for Senators and paid for by the Government, and that there is no limit to the expense incurred.

Every Senator knows that that statement is absolutely untrue. There is a limit, and has been a limit for many, many years, as to the articles that can be obtained by Senators. It is fixed by statute. They may go there and buy scissors, or buy paper, or buy ink, and it is charged to them; and it comes out of the sum that is allowed annually to each Senator.

Mr. WINDOM. What is the amount?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. It is, for stationery and for newspapers, $125 a year.

Mr. CONKLING. What sort of articles does that paper say that we get?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. It mentions gold tooth-picks, wedding envelopes, card-cases, and a long list of articles.

I will say further, in response to the Senator from Minnesota, that if Senators do not take the articles, they take the balance in money that may be found their due out of the $125. Now, I desire to call attention to the fact that the expenses charged in this long catalogue of items are for all articles furnished to maintain the entire Senate wing of the Capitol; for the Sergeant-at-Arms, for the Secretary of the Senate, for the engrossing clerks; and yet these items are all lumped together and then divided by the number of Senators; and that is often put forth as the amount which each Senator takes annually here at the Capitol for his own private use.

For instance, it says, "to what use could eighty-two pounds of sponge be put?" I am surprised that a paper usually so well informed as the Boston Daily Advertiser should not understand that a large amount of coarse sponge is used for the purpose of cleaning the marble stairways and the floors. It is a mere ordinary scrubbing article.

Then it says:

The days have gone, however, when it is deemed disgraceful for a Senator to accept from the Government a few dollars' worth of horse-car tickets to save the expense of a ride to the Capitol, and we cannot hope to make an impression there by any analysis of the Clerk's books.

Every Senator knows that that is an absolute fabrication made out of the whole cloth. No Senator ever receives a car-ticket. The only amount that is paid, if anything is paid, for carriage-hire in any way is paid out for the carrying of bills from the Capitol to the President by the proper committee, to be examined and signed by the President; and I think there is a carriage kept for that purpose. Certainly there ought to be one so kept. It is possible that that committee have used horse-car tickets; but I do not suppose it to be true that in any instance a horse-car ticket has ever been used by a Senator.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They are used by the messengers when on the business of the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Of course they are; and yet these charges, being published by a respectable paper, go into all the country press as absolute and incontrovertible facts; and the calumny grows from year to year. Therefore, sir, in order to crush out this fruitful source of scandal, I think it would be better that the stationery-room should supply absolutely the articles only that are required, as stationery, papers, pens, ink, &c.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I ask the Senator if he understands that article to be an editorial?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. It is an editorial.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I ask the Senator further, whether he understands it to be a fact that fancy goods of the style he speaks of, gold tooth-picks and the like, are kept in the stationery-room at all?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I never have examined, and do not know particularly what articles are kept there.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Does the honorable Senator think it is a nice thing for us to spend our time in correcting these false allegations that appear in the press in different parts of the country and predicate our legislation upon them? I never had any gold tooth-pick, or any of these fancy goods, and I do not propose to be disturbed or moved from my propriety by the publication of any of these things that appear in the papers. The idea of our instructing a committee to investigate whether tooth-picks are sold below in the stationery-room! I suppose, as a matter of fact, if any gentleman chooses to send his clerk out into the street he can get one immediately, and I dare say he might employ the keeper of the stationery to do the same thing. But that any of these things are kept there for Senators at the public expense I do not suppose any one, who is not crazy or foolish enough to publish such a thing, believes; and I do not think it is worth while to instruct a committee to investigate on such a subject.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I have seen this floating scandal for a number of years, and I know of no way by which it can be extinguished except by stopping it at the source. Therefore, without being moved at all, so far as I am concerned personally, about it, I am in favor of having the stationery-room so conducted that it shall be impossible for us to be subjected to any more of this sort of scandal.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. But my friend, by his argument, is giving force to an implication that the thing does exist—that we do keep a fancy concern down stairs—when there is not one word of truth in it, as I believe.

Mr. HOWE. I agree with the Senator from Vermont in the purpose at which he aims. It would delight me beyond measure to have the stationery-room, or any other room in this Capitol, conducted in such a manner that it could not be lied about. [Laughter.] But I ask the Senator precisely how he would have that room conducted in order to secure that end?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I propose to do it by the resolution I have offered, to exclude from it everything except the articles of stationery mentioned.

Mr. HOWE. And will the Senator guarantee that it will not be lied about when it is trimmed down in that way?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Not at all.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am not sensitive in relation to this article, because I think I shall not be found as coming within the list of individuals who have made any of these purchases in any way, either directly or indirectly; but I think, for the papers that are disposed to publish the truth, it may be well to affirm here that each of us is, under the law, entitled to $125 a year for stationery and newspapers, and it is a part of our compensation. If we use it all for these things, very well; if we do not, it is ours by law, and the balance is received by Senators. I may therefore receive the amount to which I am entitled to-day for my stationery; I may purchase my stationery elsewhere if I please, and when that money, which is my own, is in my own pocket, if I choose to convert it into tooth-picks, it is nobody's business; though I never do.

But I did not rise for that purpose. I rose for another purpose, and one which, I think, is of some importance and needs a contradiction to the country. I have not seen the article from which the Senator from Vermont has been reading; but my attention has been called to another statement, and probably it is a part of this very one, in which it is alleged as one of the wrongs of the Senate that the expenses of the Senate were, in round numbers, about $500,000 for the year 1872, and $1,000,000 for the year 1873. Now, whoever made that statement did have some ground to base it upon, and this was the ground: He took six months of the year 1872 on which to base the expenditures for 1872, and took the whole of the year 1873 on which to base the expenditures for 1873. That is all he had to do, and he did that by taking the report of our Secretary, because the law was changed, by which he was directed to make up his account ending with the fiscal year, instead of what had been done prior to that, ending with the 1st day of December. If the man who sought the authority and gave the information had looked at the Secretary's report, or had sought to tell the whole truth, he would have seen that the Secretary, in his report made in 1872, stated distinctly that it was for only six months, and that the expenditures were $470,000. Then in the next report, as we can all see by reading, if he had taken the next report he would have seen that the report was for a full year. One covered a long and another a short session, and that also made a difference.

The statement has gone abroad that we doubled the expenses of this body between 1872 and 1873. The only foundation on earth for making that allegation was, simply taking the expenditures for half of one year on which to base the comparison. I have thought, sir, that it was well that I should make that statement. I do not know but that the same statement is made in the article which has been read.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. It is.

Mr. HAMLIN. That is the truth of that; and I think from one you can judge of the truth of all, and from the falsehood of one you can judge of the falsehood of all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

INTERRUPTION OF SPEAKERS.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reporting a rule for the adoption of the Senate, that it shall not be in order for any Senator to be interrupted while speaking, even with his own consent, unless interrupted on a point of order or to correct an erroneous statement of facts, or on account of some personal reference.

Mr. President, I am perhaps as guilty of the offense intended to be remedied by this resolution as any Senator, but I think it is a usage "more honored in the breach than the observance," and I desire to call the attention of the Committee on Rules to the subject.

Mr. MORTON. I suggest to my friend that the exceptions he makes in the resolution will certainly ruin the effect of it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. The Committee on Rules might strike out the exception.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It only asks an inquiry.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to take up the bill (H. R. No. 1382) authorizing coinage to be executed by the mints of the United States for foreign countries. I think it will only take the time that will be necessary to read it. It was reported the other day by the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PRATT. I have morning business.

Mr. SHERMAN. I thought the morning business was through.

Mr. PRATT. I wish to ask the sense of the Senate upon making the following order:

Ordered, That J. H. Russell be allowed to withdraw from the files his papers presented in support of his claim against the United States for the destruction of his steamboat, J. H. Russell, reported upon adversely May 15, 1872, upon condition of leaving copies of said papers on file: Provided, however, That his letter to the Secretary of War, dated August 5, 1867, shall not be withdrawn, nor the report made in the case.

This claimant has produced to me some additional evidence, not, as I think, very vital to the case; but I believe his idea is that he may make his claim good, possibly in the Court of Claims, and for that purpose he wishes to withdraw his evidence from the files of the Senate. The case was simply this: He presented a claim for the destruction of his steamboat, which was engaged in post trade on the Mississippi River. She was loaded with cotton at Vicksburgh, and was on her way down the river, when she was detained at Baton Rouge. She was first signaled at Baton Rouge, and not obeying the signal, a cannon was fired across the bow of his boat and he was compelled to round to and compelled to take on board a company of cavalry, with their equipments and stores. His further claim was that at that time confederates got on board with Greek fire and set fire to his boat, and that she was burned in consequence.

The ground of the committee's rejecting his claim was a letter furnished by the Secretary of War, written in August, 1867, which seemed to be entirely at variance with the affidavits that he came before Congress with. That letter to the Secretary of War showed that the boat was set on fire by a man employed on his boat, who had been employed for months, and the committee rejected the claim because of this variance. I do not know what may be the actual merits of the claim; but that he lost his boat is undoubtedly true. I have thought it proper to make this statement of facts for the purpose of ascertaining the sense of the Senate, whether it is proper to make the order in the qualified form in which I have drawn it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The discrepancy is said to exist between the affidavits and the claimant's letter.

Mr. PRATT. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The originals of both should be copied, and let him take the copies.

Mr. PRATT. Let it be made in that form; let the original affidavits with which he came before Congress be retained on file, and certified copies of those affidavits be furnished.

The order, as modified, was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HOWE, it was—Ordered, That the petition and papers of Nathan Cole be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the papers in the case of A. S. Lee, an applicant for a pension, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and committed to the Committee on Pensions. The report was favorable, and the bill passed the Senate, but failed in the House for some reason that I do not know.

The papers were ordered to be withdrawn and referred.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I ask for an order authorizing William A. Griffin to take his petition and papers from the files and refer them to the Committee on Claims. In this case there was a favorable report, but it never was acted upon by Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made.

On motion of Mr. MORTON, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of Bright F. Hayes, and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

On motion of Mr. KELLY, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of G. A. Henderson be taken from the files, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. KELLY, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Charles B. Philips be taken from the files, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. HITCHCOCK submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to furnish the Senate with copies of the annual reports of the Government directors of the Union Pacific Railroad for the years 1872 and 1873.

COINAGE FOR FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now ask that the bill which I mentioned a few moments ago be taken up and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1382) authorizing coinage to be executed at the mints of the United States for foreign countries.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which proposes to make it lawful for coinage to be executed at the mints of the United States for any foreign country applying for the same, according to the legally prescribed standards and devices of such country, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe; and the charge is to be equal to the expenses thereof, including labor, materials, and use of machinery, to be fixed by the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; but the manufacture of such coin is not to interfere with the required coinage of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEPUTY COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. WRIGHT. I reported back from the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment on Friday a bill to abolish the office of deputy commissioner of internal revenue, being House bill No. 1231. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of that bill now. I suppose there will be no objection to it.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider bill (H. R. No. 1231) to abolish the office of deputy commissioner of internal revenue.

It abolishes the office of deputy commissioner of internal revenue, made vacant by the death of General B. J. Sweet, and authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the recommendation of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, to designate one of the two remaining deputy commissioners as first deputy commissioner, who shall perform the duties and be paid only the salary prescribed for the office of deputy commissioner hereby abolished.

Mr. SUMNER. I shall not propose any amendment to the bill; but I desire to say that I welcome it as a reform in the right direction. My only regret is that it does not go further, and abolish a great many other offices in the Internal-Revenue Department, in regard to which I am assured by persons who are bound to know that such a reform can be properly and safely made. I am very sorry that there is hesitation. I have made one or two efforts in this Chamber in that direction which have not been received with favor, but I am none the less convinced that it is a direction in which the Senate ought to push forward.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SENATOR FROM LOUISIANA.

Mr. MORTON. According to notice given last week——

Mr. McCREERY. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky will state his point of order.

Mr. McCREERY. The point of order is this: that I had the unanimous consent of the Senate to address them to-day at one o'clock on Louisiana affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair now announces that the morning hour has expired. There is no unfinished business before the Senate.

Mr. McCREERY. I move to take up the resolution of the Senator from Indiana in regard to Louisiana affairs.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The special order which would take precedence is the resolution from the Committee on Finance. Does the Senator from Kentucky make any motion?

Mr. MORTON. I had the floor, but it was taken from me by a point of order.

Mr. McCREERY. I move to take up the resolution of the Senator from Indiana, in order to address the Senate on Louisiana affairs, in pursuance of an appointment made some days since.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. MORTON. For an explanation.

Mr. THURMAN. If I am not mistaken the resolution of the Committee on Finance was postponed until to-morrow, Tuesday. It is not before the Senate. And that was done in order to allow the Senator from Kentucky to address the Senate to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is true; but that does not take from it its character as a special order. When there is no other business before the Senate, the first special order is in order.

Mr. THURMAN. Then the vote to postpone until Tuesday had no effect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana has the floor.

Mr. MORTON. I move, according to notice given last week, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution to admit Mr. Pinchback to his seat on this floor as a Senator from Louisiana.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the resolution introduced by himself in regard to seating Mr. Pinchback as a Senator from the State of Louisiana. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the resolution is before the Senate, and will be read.

Mr. MORTON. Before making the motion——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear it read.

Mr. HAMLIN. The resolution is now before the Senate, is it not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. HAMLIN. Then I ask the Senator from Indiana to allow me to submit a motion. I will not take up more than a single minute. It is an amendment to the resolution which I propose to submit.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky will state the point of order.

Mr. STEVENSON. When the question of Louisiana was up on a former occasion, my colleague [Mr. MCCREERY] was entitled to the floor. It is now up, and I do not see how he can be deprived of the floor. When the question of Louisiana was last under discussion, I repeat, my colleague was recognized as entitled to the floor on that resolution; it is now before the Senate; and my question of order is that he cannot be deprived of his right, which he has patiently waited for for weeks, and to which, under the rules of the Senate, it seems to me he is entitled.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order. Had the Senate adjourned pending this resolution, the Senator from Kentucky would have been recognized by the Chair as entitled to the floor; but that is not the manner in which the resolution comes before the Senate. It is brought up to-day by the motion of the Senator from Indiana, who has the floor to make the motion and the floor to make his remarks upon the subject.

Mr. HAMLIN. I supposed everybody in the Senate was disposed to concede to the Senator from Kentucky the floor to-day. I understood him to have it. A mere suggestion from the Senator from Indiana, if he proposes to make it before the Senator from Kentucky proceeds with his speech, I suppose will not be disagreeable to the Senator himself. I want to offer an amendment to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Indiana.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Maine for that purpose?

Mr. MORTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. HAMLIN. I send up the amendment, and I will state in a word the reason for my amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have the whole thing read, the resolution and amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. The resolution submitted by Mr. MORTON, on the 20th of January is as follows:

Resolved, That the credentials of the Hon. P. B. S. Pinchback be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections; that the committee have power to send for persons and papers, and be instructed to investigate the circumstances attending the election of said Pinchback to a seat in this body.

The amendment now submitted by Mr. HAMLIN is to strike out all after the word "resolved," and insert the following:

That P. B. S. Pinchback be permitted to take a seat in this body as a Senator from the State of Louisiana upon taking the proper oath, and that the Committee on Privileges and Elections proceed hereafter to consider the grounds on which his right to a seat is contested, and hereafter make report to the Senate thereon.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have drawn that amendment in the precise language of the resolution submitted by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] in the case of Mr. GOLDTHWAITE. I was myself at that period of time a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and concurred in that resolution. I think it met the unanimous consent of the committee, and I believe the unanimous approval of the Senate. There is some wisdom in preserving a little of consistency in the manner of our proceedings. The argument then was that we could not deal with a Senator until he had become so by taking the oath of office. I have offered the amendment simply to conform to the practice of the Senate in that case, as a substitute for the resolution submitted by the Senator from Indiana. This is all I have to say.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine would in its nature be a substitute for the original resolution, and for the motion I am about to make.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. EDMUNDS in the chair.) The Chair will state to the Senator from Indiana that, as he understands the question, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine is not now in order. The motion of the Senator from Indiana was to refer this resolution to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. That motion precedes a motion to amend, by the rules. The Chair therefore cannot at this time entertain the amendment of the Senator from Maine. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana, to commit the original resolution to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. MORTON. The resolution read by the clerk was one of which I simply gave notice. That motion was not pending. I shall make the motion in a little different language from that employed by the resolution read by the Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands, then, that the Senator from Indiana did not submit that motion.

Mr. MORTON. I simply gave notice of it. I have now moved to take up the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the amendment of the Senator from Maine to the original resolution would be in order, and it will be received.

Mr. MORTON. Before submitting the motion of which I gave notice, I desire very briefly, and I shall detain my friend from Kentucky a very short time, to state the status of the original resolution and to recapitulate the grounds upon which I place it, so that I may be understood in the action which I now propose to take.

I argued, on a former occasion, that the credentials of Mr. Pinchback being in regular form, he had a prima facie case and was entitled to be sworn in as a member, and to take his seat in this body; and that any question as to whether he was elected by a legal Legislature or whether he was duly elected must be considered afterward, if it be conceded that the credentials were signed by the governor of Louisiana. I read in support of that argument the following resolution offered in a recent case in this body by the Senator from Ohio, for the admission of Mr. GOLDTHWAITE, Senator from Alabama:

Resolved, That GEORGE GOLDTHWAITE be permitted to take a seat in this body as a Senator from the State of Alabama upon taking the proper oath; and that the Committee on Privileges and Elections proceed hereafter to consider the grounds on which his right to a seat is contested, and hereafter make a report to the Senate thereon.

I further read an extract from the speech of the author of the resolution, the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN,] in the following words:

So far as GOLDTHWAITE was concerned, that report was unanimous on the part of the committee, as appears by the report itself, a copy of which I hold in my hand. It went upon the ground, which has been observed ever since this Government was formed, that the certificate of election of a Senator was prima facie evidence of his right to a seat, and sufficient until it was overthrown; that he was entitled on that prima facie case to his seat in that body, and if any one said he was not entitled to it the contestant was bound to overthrow that prima facie case by sufficient charges and sufficient testimony, but that in the mean time the Senator was entitled to his seat on his prima facie case.

There was not, and there is not, as I had occasion to observe then, after a most careful examination of all the precedents, a single case in the whole history of this Government in which that rule has been departed from.

I then argued that the only question was whether Kellogg, who signed these credentials, was and is governor of Louisiana. I urged in support of the position that we should accept him as governor of Louisiana that he had been in the undisputed possession of the office for now some twelve months, had been accepted as such by every department of the State government; that the State officers and county officers were acting upon commissions received from him; that he was recognized as governor of Louisiana by all the courts of that State, beginning with the supreme court, and all the subordinate courts; that he had been recognized as the governor of Louisiana by what purported to be the Legislature of Louisiana, had been by that Legislature declared duly elected; they had submitted their enactments to him and he had signed them or vetoed them as they met with the approval or disapproval of his judgment. I further showed that he had exercised without objection all the functions of governor for this long period. I further showed that he had been recognized as the governor of Louisiana by the President of the United States on various occasions by orders, by telegrams sent by the Attorney-General by the authority of the President, by a proclamation issued to the people of Louisiana, and by a message sent to the two Houses of Congress; that upon various occasions and in various ways he had been distinctly and conclusively recognized as the governor of Louisiana by the President. I further showed that the President was empowered to decide upon this question by virtue of the act of Congress of 1795 intended to carry out the express provision of the Constitution; that the authority of the President to make decision in this matter had been expressly recognized in the case of Luther vs. Borden, the celebrated case from Rhode Island, in which it was declared that under the Constitution and by the act of Congress, in any State where there were two contending governments and the President was called upon to preserve the peace or suppress insurrection or domestic violence, the President was authorized to decide, and must necessarily decide which was the lawful State government, and that the decision he might make in that case was binding upon the courts and was binding upon every department of this Government until it was reversed by an act of Congress; that the President in making that decision was executing an act of Congress and not exercising arbitrary authority upon his own part, and that his act was in that respect the act of the Government of the United States; that the propriety of his decision could not be called in question by either House alone, but could only be called in question and reversed by an act of Congress passed by both bodies in the form of a law under the fourth article of the Constitution.

I further showed that the President had recognized the Legislature of Louisiana in the same way; and that that recognition was binding in the same manner until it was reversed by an act of Congress.

I further showed that the supreme court of Louisiana had, on several occasions, upon questions properly before that court, decided that Kellogg was the governor of Louisiana; and that the Legislature that elected Pinchback was the lawful Legislature of Louisiana; that that Legislature had, without interruption, exercised the functions of a Legislature throughout the term; that it had passed some one hundred and nineteen laws; that those laws were enforced by the courts and recognized as the laws of Louisiana.

In conclusion, I presented the further consideration that this question involved a great fundamental principle, vital to the existence of our Government, which was that where a question arose under a State law or under a State constitution it was to be decided by State tribunals; and that the decision of the tribunals of the State upon questions arising under their own laws was binding not only upon the people of the State but upon the Government of the United States; that this was a necessary result from our form of Government; and that any alleged irregularity or, if you please, fraud in a State election in the election of a governor or of a State Legislature was cognizable and was determinable by the tribunals of the State, and when the State tribunals had passed upon such questions their decision was binding upon the Government of the United States; and that if the Government of the United States assumed the right to go behind the decision of the State tribunals to examine into a question arising in a State election under State laws; if it assumed the right to set aside a State government because of alleged frauds or irregularities in a purely State election, the assumption of such power was the end of the State governments and placed every State government in this Union at the will and caprice of the Government of the United States; and that State governments thereafter would exist only by sufferance. That was the ground upon which I placed the original motion.

Now, Mr. President, within a few days, and since that time, information has come to me of a character that I was not at liberty to overlook or to pass by, in effect charging Mr. Pinchback with improper conduct in connection with his election; which charges, if true, would, in my opinion, render it improper for him to have a seat upon this floor. Having due regard to my honor as a Senator, as the chairman of the committee charged with such investigations, and my duty to the Senate, I did not feel at liberty to withhold that information from the Senate and to proceed with the original resolution asking Mr. Pinchback to be seated. To have withheld that information from the Senate would have been an assumption upon my part of the right to determine the question that Mr. Pinchback should first be seated and the investigation made afterward. I thought I had no right myself to determine that question, and that it was my duty to bring it before the Senate and devolve upon the Senate the responsibility in regard to that question, as well as in regard to others, whether the Senate would seat Mr. Pinchback first and investigate him afterward, or would first investigate him and determine whether he was entitled to be seated afterward. I knew of no way of placing myself and of getting that question properly before the Senate, than by making the motion which I now send to the Chair:

Resolved, That the credentials of Hon. P. B. S. Pinchback be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections; that the committee have power to send for persons and papers, and be instructed to inquire into the conduct of said Pinchback in connection with said election.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. THURMAN in the chair.) Does the Chair understand the Senator to modify his original resolution by substituting this for it?

Mr. MORTON. The other was simply a notice. It was not offered. I offer this.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As a substitute for the first resolution?

Mr. MORTON. I suppose it is in the nature of a modification of the first resolution.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield the floor?

Mr. MORTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. CARPENTER. I thought the Senator was through.

Mr. MORTON. I intended to make another remark, but the Senator may go on.

Mr. CARPENTER. I will wait until the Senator concludes.

Mr. MORTON. I will yield the floor.

Mr. McCREERY. Mr. President——

Mr. CARPENTER. Will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me two minutes and a half?

Mr. McCREERY. I will yield to you one minute and a half. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. President, before the resolution now presented is passed upon by the Senate, I desire to submit some remarks upon this whole case. It will be impossible for me to do so to-day, as I am suffering from a cold which makes it difficult for me to speak; but when other Senators have discussed the question, I will ask the Senate, as a matter of courtesy, to allow the matter to lie over until next Wednesday, when I shall be able to speak on the subject.

Mr. McCREERY. Mr. President, I have waited long and patiently for an opportunity to submit my views on Louisiana affairs. I do not know that I can advance a single thought with the slightest claim to originality or a suggestion worthy of the serious attention of this body. No gentleman present places a lower estimate on the value of my utterances than I do myself. We are all equally interested in preserving and perpetuating our republican institutions; but as to the best method of accomplishing that great result, our views are as various and conflicting as though we were the advocates of opposing systems. But where honesty of purpose is mutually accorded, harsh epithets will not be applied to our adversaries, however erroneous we may regard their opinions. The good old-fashioned democracy of Jefferson and Jackson, who maintained the absolute sovereignty of the States and the people, whenever and wherever the same had not been delegated to the General Government, may sound as discordant in republican ears as their own radical and reckless disregard of State lines and State rights does in mine. I am glad that I have an opportunity of addressing the Senate to-day on Louisiana affairs. I know that I shall be entirely unable to do justice to the subject, or to meet the expectations of Senators, provided Senators have expectations.

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] has supported his resolution by two speeches of more than his usual vigor, and I might despair of results, as far as I am concerned, did I not rest with abiding confidence upon the intelligence and integrity of the Senate when it comes to pass upon the facts involved in this controversy.

In these days of bare-faced impudence it is painful to contemplate the more than feminine modesty of the Senator's first proposition. [Laughter.]

The circumstances attending the Louisiana election and the inauguration of the Kellogg government were so novel, so extraordinary, and so revolutionary in their character, that they produced a shock which was felt from one extremity of the Union to the other. The blow had fallen upon Louisiana, it is true; but what was to save their own States if the same arm should be raised for their destruction? The Senate of the United States, about the middle of January following, responded to the general apprehension and the general alarm by instructing one of the ablest committees of the body to make the solemn inquiry whether there was any existing State government in Louisiana, and how and by whom it was constituted. That committee entered upon the investigation with a full sense of their responsibilities, and discharged their important duties in a manner worthy of all commendation. Witnesses were summoned from the remote corners of the Union, and held here for weeks at public expense. Records and constitutions, laws, letters, and telegrams, were passed in review, until a mass of oral and documentary evidence was collected which throws a perfect flood of light upon the affairs of Louisiana. But now, when the time has come for its use, the chairman of the committee, in very excess of modesty, assures us, in effect, that the contents of this volume are positively of less value than a legal technicality or a prima facie presumption. The work which he thus depreciates owes its existence to himself. I have too much respect for him to say that he reminds me of an unnatural father conspiring against the life of his child; but I will say that I go back in history nearly two thousand years before I find anything like a parallel to his humility and to his utter self-abnegation. [Laughter.] One of the greatest authors, as well as one of the purest and best men of antiquity, expired in the arms of his emperor, leaving, as a last injunction, that the work to which he was then giving the finishing touches should be burned after his death; but Augustus, who had heard the flowing numbers from the lips of the poet himself, wisely disregarded the dying request of his friend, and the song of "Arms and the man" is repeated in every land where literary merit is understood or appreciated; and as it is enshrined in the hearts, so would I, if I could, engrave the contents of this volume upon the memories of men, so that they should never be forgotten until some future Prescott or Bancroft shall arise to weave them into a chapter of American history, where they will remain forever. Let it rest in the libraries, public and private, side by side with the inspirations of the Roman bard, the one for the admiration of, and the other as a warning to, the human race.

I contend that it is too late to talk about prima facie presumptions after the proof has been heard. Whatever might have been the conclusion at the first view, or the first appearance, is of no consequence, as the facts are now before us. The evidence was taken to satisfy our minds as to the existence or non-existence of a State government in Louisiana, and how and by whom it was constituted; or it was taken for the entertainment and amusement of the Senator from Indiana. He relied on this testimony precisely as far as it answered his ends, and he must not complain if we follow his example.

The Senator was prodigal in his citation of authorities, and may have given undue prominence to his own course on other occasions; for neither the decisions of courts nor his own action, enlightened and patriotic as it may have been, can determine the matters now under consideration, for the simple and obvious reason that there never was an analogous case to this on the American continent, or any other continent under the sun. We may make a precedent, but there are no precedents for us to follow.

The second proposition urged by the Senator was hypothetical: that if Kellogg is governor of Louisiana, that is an end of the argument. Now, if Kellogg received a majority of the votes cast, so ascertained by a fair canvass of the official returns, and was legally and constitutionally inaugurated, then he is governor of Louisiana; but if he received a minority of the vote cast, and without any canvass of the official returns was inaugurated by the lawless proceedings of a Federal judge backed by the Army of the United States, then I hold he is not governor, but an intruder, and liable to a prosecution under the intrusion acts of Louisiana.

The Senator from Indiana has said much about the Legislature of Louisiana; but I have the authority of four honored members of this body, one of whom sits before me, [Mr. CARPENTER,] for stating that there is not, and never has been, a quorum of both houses who had any pretense of having been elected to their seats; and as I have their report in my hands, I will answer what has been said about State-rights by reading a single sentence from it:

> For the United States to interfere in a State election, and, by the employment of troops, set up a governor and Legislature without a shadow of right, and then to refuse redress of the wrong upon the ground that to grant relief would be interfering with the rights of the State, is a proposition difficult to utter with a grave countenance.

The third point to which I will direct attention was a glowing tribute in the Senator's first speech to the Kellogg government. Never having had my attention called to the superior excellences of that institution I was taken completely by surprise, and that surprise was increased from the circumstance that the defense was in advance of the attack. It is a fact, I believe, that those who are most enamored of the Kellogg administration live very remote from its influence. It looks best when it is so far away that you cannot see it at all. [Laughter.] But the idea was purely speculative and fanciful, and demands no serious reply at my hands. If in the terrible ordeal through which the people of Louisiana are passing it gives them any comfort to know that the Senator from Indiana appreciates and admires the peculiar civil polity under which they are living, I sympathize too deeply in their misfortunes to desire for a single instant to deprive them of that melancholy satisfaction. [Laughter.]

The fourth point assumed by the honorable Senator was that the decision of the supreme court of Louisiana is final. No one knows better than himself that this statement is subject to several important qualifications. To render such decision final, or to give it any binding force upon any one, it is essential that the court should have jurisdiction, that the parties in interest should be served with process, and that the judgment to be valid must decide the matters in issue; and all beyond that is surplusage and utterly worthless in that or any other cause. Tried by this test the cases cited by the Senator, so far as the merits of this controversy are concerned, are wholly and entirely without authority.

The returning boards of Louisiana were at law. The amount involved was too small for either of them to take the case to the Supreme Court; then could the intervention of a third party give jurisdiction where there was confessedly none before? If this is true, it is manifest to my mind that the judgments of every justice of the peace in the country might be brought up by the legerdemain of intervention for the revision of the Supreme Court of the United States. It is worthy of remark that after A. P. Field, by his petition for intervention and appeal, got the case before the court, he was wholly ignored, as he was bound to be, in the judgment, which simply decided that Lynch and his associates were the legal returning board. If such a decision, rendered under such circumstances, is not an absolute nullity, then remove all limitation to the jurisdiction of courts and allow them to roam at will over the entire field of contention, deciding everything or nothing according to their sovereign pleasure.

Morgan and Kennard had a contest for a seat on the supreme bench of Louisiana. Each of these gentlemen had a commission, and Morgan had been confirmed by the senate, while Kennard was in possession of the office. But that possession availed him nothing. He was tried under a rule returnable in twenty-four hours; the same time was allowed for appeal, returnable to the supreme court in two days, there to have preference over all other causes, and to be tried immediately. The speed of Justice Kennard through the courts reminds us more of the old Indian pastime of running the gauntlet, with a lick or a kick at every step, than of the gravity and deliberation of a judicial proceeding. In five days after the passage of the act authorizing this summary process, a justice of the supreme court was divested of his official robes. The caption of the law shows that it was passed for the sole purpose of regulating proceedings in "contestation between persons claiming a judicial office." It prescribed a mode and a manner of reaching a result unknown to the law; but it was a mode and a manner designed and intended to settle judicial contests, and for nothing else. Could a proceeding under this statute affect title to real estate or personal property? Could a governor, a lieutenant-governor, a member of the Legislature, a constable, or a policeman be tried under its provisions? Few lawyers here or elsewhere will answer in the affirmative; and yet in this contest between Morgan and Kennard the court not only decides the issue in the cause, but it pretends to decide who is governor, and passes upon the rights of nearly three hundred men, who claimed to be members-elect to the Legislature. If any man contends for jurisdiction under the statute, was the governor, or any member of the Legislature, served with a rule twenty-four hours in advance of the judgment? Can a man be deprived of his rights without a day or an hour's notice?

These were the cases cited by the Senator from Indiana. So far as they support the Kellogg government, I submit they are nullities. I have referred to them very briefly and very imperfectly, but sufficiently, I hope, to induce Senators to read the able dissenting opinion of Justice Wiley, as well as the conclusive argument embodied in the report, and the logical and forcible views of the great lawyer of Illinois, Judge Trumbull, who was at that time an honored member of this body.

It seems to me that the Senator from Indiana made an important omission in his citation of authorities. The supreme court of Louisiana managed, in some way or other, prior to the 12th day of December, 1872, and before any case had been presented for their adjudication, to give an opinion, or to intimate an opinion, on the interesting questions involved in this discussion. Whether it was done in private consultation or in open court does not appear; it may have been on the street corners or at the hotels; but it is nevertheless true that on that day James F. Casey, the collector of the port of New Orleans, informed the President, "The supreme court is known to be in sympathy with the republican State government." Casey spoke advisedly, and would have been incapable of misleading the President on a matter of such vital moment. This shows that the supreme court of Louisiana decided, or intimated a decision, in favor of the Kellogg government before it was a government; and, as we have seen, it has been at it, "in season and out of season," ever since.

The Senator from Indiana attempted to sustain his four propositions by argument. I shall attempt to overthrow them by facts. In the conclusion of his address he seemed to intimate that he had sufficient testimony in reserve to crush any foe who might be rash enough to meet him in the field of debate. If he has such an amount of evidence in reserve, as chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections he should have laid it on our table and saved us from his destructive assaults. I have no fear, however, of his masked battery. I have a duty to perform, and I shall discharge it to the best of my ability with such lights as I have before me. If I am slain at his first fire I shall fall in defense of the sacred rights of a downtrodden but generous people, who will remember with gratitude even the feeble effort which I may make in their behalf.

Having made these references to the able speech of the Senator from Indiana I shall attempt to present some reflections from a different stand-point. I shall endeavor to ascertain whether it has been established by competent testimony, or by any testimony at all, that the fifteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States was violated in the Louisiana election; whether W. Pitt Kellogg was chosen governor by the suffrages of the people, and whether he was inaugurated in pursuance of law or in defiance of law. I do not desire to invoke support nor provoke opposition from partisan considerations. The gravest question that ever engaged the attention of the American Senate is presented for our deliberation, and the record we leave will live when we are gone.

A sentiment has found a lodgment in the public mind that there is at this time a wide-spread demoralization pervading all classes of the community. Nor is there a very decided disposition even to make this body an honorable exception. Such a sentiment, whether well founded or not, is calculated to work irreparable injury. Confidence gives way to distrust; commerce is checked by the disappearance of circulation; the arm of industry is paralyzed lest there should be no adequate reward; and society, shaken to its foundations, bewildered and amazed, reels along stupefied by the stunning reports of bursting banks and toppling fortunes and the general financial crash. Just emerging from scenes like these, it will inspire the people with renewed hope if they shall see the Senate of the United States rising above the influences of party, and deciding great questions upon the principles of even-handed justice. There was a period in our history when the proceedings of this body were regarded with lively interest and with profound admiration; and if we fail, as fail we must, to attain to the height of their eloquence and their genius, we may at least emulate their example in point of patriotic devotion to principle. There cannot be a very considerable number in any community who would rejoice at the perpetration of a wrong, and an opportunity is here presented of meeting the views of those who incline to the right.

The examination and cross-examination of witnesses have placed the facts before us. The feelings of gentlemen who occupied the stand were not spared, but they were sifted and sounded until, if the truth was in them, it was brought forth. To give an illustration of the searching character of this examination, I will simply state that the distinguished chairman of the committee asked Hon. Samuel Armstead if he could read, and that, too, with a full knowledge of the fact that he had received a large majority of the votes cast in Louisiana for the responsible position of secretary of state! That was a nice question to address to an eminent divine and a Christian politician, whose sound theology and practical statesmanship had been appreciated and indorsed by the great State of Louisiana! [Laughter.] Would that Senator have propounded such an interrogatory to the archbishop of Canterbury, or Gladstone, or any of the great lights of the Church or Parliament of England; and, if not, then why propound so humiliating an interrogatory to an American secretary of state? [Laughter.]

The entire record before us covers nearly twelve hundred pages; and instead of complaining of its length, I would desire that it was still more comprehensive. I regret that the opportunity was not given to the President and to his law adviser to answer a few questions touching the limitations of power: Whether the powers not delegated to the General Government were reserved to the States and the people, respectively, or were they bestowed ex gratia upon the President? Has the Federal court universal and absolute jurisdiction of all questions pertaining and belonging to the States, and in case that tribunal is guilty of flagrant usurpation, is it the duty of the Executive, with the Army and the Navy, to maintain and uphold that usurpation? It would be instructive to the people to know whether this Administration ascribes to them intelligence and capacity sufficient to elect their own officers and manage their own internal affairs, or is it deemed more advisable that the Federal court should have a controlling supervisory power, correcting their errors and overruling their action by its mandates and decrees, and securing them in the perpetual enjoyment of the benefits and blessings of a carpet-bag ascendency enforced at the point of the bayonet?

The fifteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States provides that "the right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude," and that "the Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation." Now, I cannot very clearly perceive what legislation was or could be required to enforce this article in the Constitution. It was the paramount law of the land, and anything in conflict with it, whether Federal, State, or territorial, was null and void. But on the 31st day of May, 1870, Congress did pass a law, the twenty-third section of which provides—

That where any person shall be defeated for any office, except presidential elector, or Representative or Delegate in Congress, or member of a State Legislature, he may institute proceedings in the circuit or district court of the United States to recover possession of such office in cases where it shall appear that the sole question touching the title to such office arises out of a denial of the right to vote to citizens who so offered to vote on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Whether this section of the statute is constitutional or not I will not stop to consider. In trying to efface all distinctions on account of race and color, a jurisdiction is established to redress the wrongs of the black man, which is closed against the white man who has sustained precisely the same injustice. And to make the discrimination still more clear and emphatic, denial of suffrage to black men may defeat an election, while a similar denial to white men is followed by no such consequences. This is incompatible with that perfect equality before the law which radical orators have made the text for their discourses for so many years.

I have cited this clause of the Constitution, and the substance of the twenty-third section of the act of 1870, because, if there is a shadow of foundation for the extraordinary assumptions of the Federal court in Louisiana, the unsubstantial claim rests on these provisions, and without their support it must fall to the ground. I would ask Senators to bear them in mind during the progress of my remarks.

The campaign of 1872 opened most auspiciously for those who were making a common effort to overthrow the republican party in the State of Louisiana. The sun of Austerlitz was not more inspiring to the armies of France than were their own high hopes as they raised the banner of equal rights and gathered around it in their own defense. The claims of kindred and of home, as well as of the great law of self-preservation, appealed to them to stand up like men in what might be their last struggle to save their native land, their altars, and their firesides, from the injustice, the spoliation, and the insatiate rapacity of the adventurers and carpet-baggers who were driving commerce from their cities and production from their fields.

Democrats and liberal republicans, forgetful of past differences, rallied under the same standard, and fused their forces for the coming strife. No despondency chilled their ardor, and no gloomy forebodings clouded their prospects. With firm faith in the justice of their cause, they resolved to win a glorious victory; and they did win it by a majority of many thousands.

On the contrary, the republican party, inflamed by dissensions, and exasperated by two conventions, one held at Baton Rouge and the other at New Orleans, with a couple of tickets in the field, fiercer in their assaults upon each other than ever they had been upon their old opponents, was shorn of its strength even before the contest had begun. Some of their shrewdest politicians left the State after the nomination and never returned until after the election. But the "old guard," the office-holders, only grew desperate in misfortune, and resolved to attest their fidelity by inaugurating a campaign which in the pageantry and pomp and pride and circumstance of its appointments should surpass anything that ever floated on the waters or rolled on wheels. [Laughter.] The marshal of Louisiana charters a steamboat, and, after taking on a cargo of speakers and whisky-barrels, committee-men, bacon, hams, and other choice edibles, he cuts his cable, raises his flag, and steams gallantly up the Mississippi River. It was a glorious sight to witness the calm, intrepid step of Marshal Packard, as he paced the quarter-deck of that vessel, surrounded by tapsters and flunkies, speakers and committee-men! At the landings, before the walk-planks were fairly adjusted, hundreds of negroes, of either sex and all ages, rushed pell-mell into the boat, looking on all sides and inquiring, "Where do you keep your cages?" Then came the grand reception, which was of that spontaneous, swelling, gushing character, only practiced by high-pressure politicians in very doubtful districts. [Laughter.] After an elegant collation, presided over with the ease and dignity acquired in high official position, the orators are led out; but from some cause or other which has never been very clearly explained their most impassioned appeals produced little or no effect upon their hearers. Perhaps the dark mass were more impressed with the novelty of the contrivance than with any line of argument that could be addressed to their understandings, for a boat-load of orators had never before appeared on those waters. Perhaps the bar-room and the rostrum were too close together. At any rate, the enterprise was ruinously expensive; and besides, each day's experience made it more and more manifest that the prospective glory which cheered them at the outset might in the end culminate in scenes of disorder, debauchery, and licentiousness, surpassing those described by Gibbon in his history of the Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire. [Laughter.] The craft began to wear a piratical appearance; the orators looked more like buccaneers than statesmen as their fiery eyeballs glared wildly under their shaggy brows. [Laughter.] Marshal Packard made land at Vidalia, a little village in the parish of Concordia; and after taking a short retrospect of the canvass as far as it had gone, he realized the desperate and utterly hopeless condition of affairs. But, instead of giving way to useless regrets, his creative genius, rising with the emergency, devised a plan which in strategic force is probably without an equal. Sitting by the Father of Waters, with his eyes resting on the lofty bluffs on the opposite bank, and reflecting on the danger of procrastination, he then and there resolved to abandon his fleet, and to make one of those flank movements that in modern warfare so frequently decide the fate of armies and of nations. His measures were taken with such prudence and circumspection that very few of the orators, perhaps not over a score, were aware of his intention until his departure. On the morning of the 5th day of October Marshal Packard was descending the Mississippi River. Why this unexpected, this sudden and abrupt change in his tactics? It was thirty days until the election; and yet he is willing to leave the impression on our minds that he was gifted with foreknowledge, and that from some casual observations here and there he came to the deliberate conclusion that a tremendous amount of fraud would be practiced at the coming election, and that to circumvent this fraud he was hastening with all speed to New Orleans. When he arrives at that city he takes no rest until he has prepared thirty thousand affidavits in four distinct forms to meet the different varieties of fraud which in his opinion would then be most prevalent. [Laughter.] When we reflect on the toils and dangers through which he had passed, and upon the agitated and perturbed condition of his mind, it is scarcely a matter of surprise that neither one of the four forms touched or in any way referred to the sole question which could affect the official returns of the election. [Laughter.] He certainly had not the statute before his eyes at the time, for he is undoubtedly too shrewd a politician to have applied such labor and expense without any prospect of advancing his cause.

Let us stop a moment and inquire whether it was simply a love of fair sailing, or some other motive, which prompted Marshal Packard to understand a month in advance the precise specific frauds which would be perpetrated at the election. Does he scorn fraud because it is fraud, or does he tolerate it on his own side, and only despise it when it comes in aid of his opponents? Was he aware, or did he believe, that there were 6,000 fraudulent votes cast in a single parish in 1870, and did he hold his peace until the fact was drawn from him in this examination; or did he send forth the Army and Navy of the United States to hunt down the guilty perpetrators and bring them to justice? No fraud upon your adversary can be stupendous enough to arouse your virtuous indignation for a single instant; but on the other hand a conjecture, a surmise, a suspicion, is sufficient ground to lead to the preparation of thirty thousand blank affidavits to be placed in the hands of irresponsible, unprincipled officials, who sally out under the direction of defeated candidates, with their money in pocket, to obtain, by bribery or perjury, the statements required. A man whose sense of justice determines the right or the wrong of an action by its injurious or its beneficial consequences to himself or his party may be listened to with many grains of allowance.

Marshal Packard appears to have labored under a strange delusion; his fears led him greatly to exaggerate the democratic strength and to underestimate his own. He, no doubt honestly, believed that it would require the amount of thirty thousand affidavits to show a republican majority, whereas half the number would have done, and he might have saved the expense of the balance.

From the day on which Marshal Packard made up his mind that the election could not be carried by steam and left his crew at Vidalia, the campaign underwent a radical change. That magnificent propeller which had borne them so triumphantly over the waves was tied to a stake; those orators who had made her forecastle quiver under the thunders of their eloquence wandered forth singly or in pairs, seeking such precarious subsistence as they might find in the practice or in the detection of fraud. [Laughter.] Some of them may have crossed over to Natchez, in the State of Mississippi; some may have returned to their homes and friends at the North; but it is almost certain that the great body of them continued to labor for the success of the republican party in Louisiana. But the machinery of the campaign had been revolutionized; it was now conducted for the most part on the basis of rumors and reports. Men were flitting hither and thither on horseback, on foot, and in carriages, and wherever they went the public mind was filled with apprehension. One man had heard a pistol-shot; another had seen a knife brandished; another had heard a man say something—all of which was held to be conclusive evidence that a fair election was impossible, and that the negroes were to be defrauded in registration and intimidated and swindled at the polls. Even John Lynch, seated comfortably behind a pair of dashing trotters, drove furiously through two parishes for a whole week hunting the registrar. He became satisfied that there was a settled plan to defeat a fair registration, and he sought the governor to tell him what he thought of such proceedings. The testimony of Mr. Lynch appears to warrant the belief that the registrar was probably making, if not as active, still a more efficient search for him; for that officer sent a messenger to him at New Orleans to say that if he would indicate a time at which he could be found in his own parish and his own house he would call and register him. Mr. Lynch indicated the hour of two, and leaving the city to return to his home in another parish, he met the registrar on the way, and right there, in the middle of the big road, the office was opened and Mr. Lynch was registered on the spot. General McMillen failed to vote after presenting himself at the polls, and went away quite incensed at the officer, because, as he supposed, his papers had not been prepared; but he afterward ascertained that the registrar had not only made out his papers, but took them to the voting place and left them with a person to be delivered to the general on his arrival; but before he met that person, General McMillen had got mad and gone off. Now, Lynch and McMillen seem to have been opposed in their political views, and in either case it would be a harsh judgment which would condemn the registrar. So that instead of there having been a settled plan to hinder and obstruct registration, there seems to have been a settled purpose to make it as general as possible, whether the parties interested desired it or not. To open an office on the highway to accommodate one gentleman, and to hunt up another with a view of delivering his certificate, are instances of official courtesy which might be commended to those enjoying even higher position. And yet there was probably more written and more spoken about these two cases than about any other twenty-seven instances in the State.

The election in Louisiana came off on the 4th day of November, 1872, and was probably the most orderly, quiet, and fair election that has been held in that State for many years. The registration was more general, and the vote cast was larger by twenty thousand, than it had ever been before. The election of the McEnery ticket by a very decided majority was almost universally conceded, and the charge of fraud had little support outside of the fact that in many of the parishes there was a considerable increase in the democratic and a corresponding decrease in the republican strength. Where it was reversed—where the radicals increased in strength—I have heard no imputation of fraud. To establish such a criterion as this might suit the views and purposes of office-holders, as it would perpetuate their power, but it would be a deadly blow to the opposition. The great victories in Ohio, New York, and Oregon would pass for naught, as a simple reference to the last presidential election would show that those States had gone for Grant. The facts brought out in the evidence clearly demonstrate that the radical ticket failed to receive the united support of those who had previously co-operated with that party. The republican senators holding over were about equally divided, and two-thirds of the fusion ticket were made up of those who had heretofore acted with the radicals.

Marshal Packard assumes that every colored man is a republican, and says that it was notorious that almost in every instance they voted the ticket just as it was printed for them and given to them by the party leaders. If this is true, it shows not only the efficiency of the drill, but the utmost docility on the part of the rank and file. But it will be borne in mind that Marshal Packard, in his canvass, went no further to the northwest than Alexandria; while Sheridan and Armstead, who traveled and spoke through that region, testify to a strong fusion sentiment among the colored population; and their reports are sustained by the official returns from that section. But if comparisons are urged between the last election and the one before it, honest republicans will not forget to deduct a large percentage from the vote of 1870 on account of the frauds then perpetrated by the radical party. They will not forget that high republican authority estimates those frauds at six thousand in a single parish.

Witnesses have animadverted in strong terms upon the reduced vote of Natchitoches. But seven thousand of its population were embraced in the new parishes of Red River and Vernon, which were formed from part of its territory. Marshal Packard mentions the circumstance as if it was a peculiar and intolerable hardship that black men had to travel from a large radius to vote at Natchitoches. I wonder if it ever occurred to his mind that white men had to travel from precisely the same radius. But in order that you may have a clear conception of the real difficulties and embarrassments that the negroes had to surmount to reach the polls, I will read a brief extract from his testimony, which may be found on page 963:

> The difficulty is that they have to follow the river, which is exceedingly crooked, so that a distance which appears to be six miles on the map may be twenty or forty miles, in some instances, as the river bends right around, comes back to almost the same place.

If Marshal Packard may be relied on, Red River is the crookedest stream in the world, and the patriots who dwell upon its banks, whatever may be their proficiency in political science, have certainly made small progress in their geographical researches. [Laughter.] But to apprehend this difficulty the more readily, you will imagine an immense curve in the river, forty miles around and four miles across. You will place an open poll at the upper end of this curve, and a settlement of forty black men at the lower end. These black men, according to the evidence, must of necessity approach that voting place by way of the river. It is a long journey, and one day's preparation is required; another day is occupied in making the tedious circuit; one day is spent in the election, another in the return, and still another in resting and recruiting themselves after the labors and fatigues of the trip. Here is a loss of five days for each man, or an aggregate loss of two hundred days going and returning from the election! Do not ask me if white men were subject to the same inconvenience. Of course not; they took the direct route, cast their ballots, and got home before dinner-time. [Laughter.]

Now, it is perfectly obvious to any sensible man that this river ought to be straightened. It is too crooked and too winding in its course to give the colored men that easy access to their franchises which should be enjoyed by every citizen. If he must follow a river, give him a straight river. [Laughter.]

This witness intimated that the voting places were sometimes thirty-five or forty miles apart; but as there was one in Natchitoches, about the center of the parish, besides three or four others scattered around, and as the parish was only about fifty miles long, it took tremendous bends in rivers and wide circuits in travel to give the narrative that harmony and consistency which an upright deponent imparts to his testimony.

The witnesses have spoken somewhat of the threats and intimidations which were employed to defeat a fair election by the people. I shall make a brief reference to two instances which appear to be the best established. Stokes was supervisor of registration in the parish of Terre Bonne; and from the day upon which he entered on his duties he seems to have been pursued by a gang of worthless, drunken blacks and whites, sometimes trying to force him to open his business in the night-time, and then endeavoring by threats to make him remove his office to another place; and at another time they actually compelled him to suspend registration. He says it would be impossible to give all the instances of interference, violence, insult, and attempted intimidation; but by the exercise of patience and forbearance he continued his labors until his work was done. He appointed fifteen voting places, so as to have them convenient to all, and selected the commissioners from each party, so as to leave no just ground of complaint. When the commissioners brought in the returns, in their presence, and in the presence of the United States supervisor and others, he proceeded to count the vote; but when he had opened and counted eight boxes a band of several hundred armed negroes, accompanied by women bearing cans of oil and bundles of hay, broke into his office, threatening to kill him and to burn the town. The terrified citizens urged him to leave the parish, and he did so, believing it was the only way to save his own life and prevent a disgraceful and bloody riot.

The town of Plaquemine, in the parish of Iberville, was held for three days and nights by an armed band of near five hundred negroes; the ballot-boxes were taken by force from the commissioners, their legal custodians, and carried by these men to Plaquemine. There the scenes of disorder and threats of violence were so great that the houses were closed, business suspended, and the commissioners of election in a body refused to have anything to do with counting the vote. Tharp, the supervisor of registration, was so far intimidated that he performed the work alone, hedged in by the crowd, who boldly declared that he must count or die, and that death would be the consequence in case the result varied from what they felt assured it ought to be!

On the Sabbath before the election a minister of the gospel ventured to urge his congregation to avoid any demonstration of violence or intimidation, and for this he was threatened with the free use of coal oil and matches; and colored men who simply avowed a determination to cast an independent vote, or to vote as they liked, were politely informed that before it was done with some of their throats would be cut. The outrages perpetrated in that parish are established by the sworn statements of more than fifty persons, old and young, white and black. And where were those apostles of freedom whose pious souls are moved by the slightest invasion of right? Where was Marshal Packard with his troops when armed ruffians for three days held high carnival in the neighboring city of Plaquemine? Or did the cause justify the deed? And did the Lynch board find in these circumstances a single fact which induced them to question the legality of the election in that parish?

But the witnesses are agreed that in the main the election in Louisiana was fair. Some of them put in exceptions and limitations; but as a rule, that is the conclusion. It was, probably, as free from fraud as any election will be which is held under the especial auspices of the Federal Government. There were upward of six hundred deputy marshals in New Orleans, and perhaps as many as two hundred in the rest of the State. How many troops these officials commanded must be left to conjecture. It is only certain that they were furnished in every instance where the requisition was made for them, and it is a lamentable fact that where they most abounded there the fraud-hunters were most successful. In proof of this I refer to Plaquemines, Bossier, Rapides, and Caddo Parishes.

Let us now briefly consider the action of the returning board. At the second meeting Herron, who was secretary of state, was removed from that office as well as from his position on the board, and his place assigned, by an executive order, to Jack Wharton, who appeared immediately and was qualified. Herron proves, by himself and John Lynch, that before he left the room he made a motion, which was carried by his own vote and that of Lynch, to appoint Longstreet and Hawkins to fill the two vacancies on the board. On the contrary, it is established by the testimony of about six gentlemen, as respectable as themselves, that no such motion was made and carried. But if it is conceded that such action was had, I cannot very clearly perceive how it could in any way improve his position. He was out of office at the time; his successor had been qualified; and neither his proposition nor his vote had any more force and effect than if submitted by any other private citizen. Nor did it belong to Herron to raise any question touching even the regularity of Wharton's appointment. The governor removed Bovee and gave the place to Herron, and the same governor removed Herron and gave the place to Wharton. Bovee was the officer elected by the people; Herron was the mere creature of executive favor; and the power that could depose the first could without difficulty displace the second. So that Herron had less than nothing to complain of, and having enjoyed the honors and emoluments of office for a season, he should have retired with alacrity to the walks of private life.

The tenacity with which men cling to official position is understood in a measure by the members of this body; but the experience of mankind affords no example comparable to the unyielding and desperate resolution with which the Lynch board grasped and held their places. If Longstreet had planted his standard as firmly on the soil of East Tennessee as he has placed his foot on this little office in Louisiana, the representatives of the States and the people, instead of assembling in these halls for the discussion of national affairs, might have been drifting to that "undiscovered country, from whose bourn no traveler returns." And I will ask the question, whether it were better that we had gone down together in one common ruin, leaving a name in the world, or to be destroyed by piecemeal, State after State—to be stricken down by the hand of violence, or by the more insidious and fatal force of unauthorized judicial construction, until the darkness of despotism shall spread over the land? I would rather meet death in any form than to witness its certain indications at the extremities, and watch its stealthy approach as it creeps from joint to joint, paralyzing, withering, and killing as it goes, until all the faculties of mind and body slowly sink under its influence.

On the third day after the rupture in the returning board, W. Pitt Kellogg filed his bill in equity in the Federal court of Louisiana, and about three weeks after that C. Cæsar Antoine filed his bill of complaint in the same court. These proceedings seem to have been instituted to perpetuate testimony to be used in sustaining such suit or suits as might be necessary to vindicate the claims of these petitioners to the offices of governor and lieutenant-governor of that Commonwealth. The lieutenant strikes a higher note than his superior. He seems inclined to restrain all terrestrial beings who could in any way hinder or impede his march to power. I have tried in vain to ascertain the precise number of those included in his sweeping injunction, but having no reliable information as to the strength of the police force of New Orleans I am left completely at a loss. I feel safe, however, in hazarding the opinion that the entire number will not exceed twenty-five hundred or three thousand.

The mandates and decrees in these cases appear to be very extraordinary and illogical departures from the petitions themselves. Under the new code in Kentucky, the edge has been taken from the demurrer as a weapon of defense, as the plaintiff may amend at will where there is or where there is not a defect. The old practitioners on this account held the code in derision, and one of them remarked that he had seen an action brought for fraud in a horse swap, which, after a variety of amendments, terminated in a judgment to settle a dead man's estate and to make a pro rata distribution of his assets among his creditors. [Laughter.] That lawyer used to enjoy his little joke; but how could he have contained himself if some one had given him the outlines of the case at bar, where a Federal judge upon a bill to perpetuate testimony, which had never been amended at all, entered a decree upsetting the civil administration of a State by armed intervention and inducting men into office who had been notoriously and overwhelmingly defeated? If it were not the most serious matter in the world, it would be the grandest farce that was ever enacted on any stage.

I venerate the legal profession. From the assemblage at Runnymede, where the great charter was extorted from a tyrannical and wicked king, to the Congress at Philadephia, which put forth our own immortal Declaration, and for ages before and afterward the lawyer has led the vanguard in the cause of civil and religious liberty. He has framed the jurisprudence of England and given us the Constitution of the United States. When we look back upon the long line who, by their wisdom, learning, and integrity, have built up and established our system—upon Blackstone, Mansfield, and Hardwicke, in England, and upon Marshall, Taney, and Chase, in America, we cannot avoid a profound regret that Judge Durell had not familiarized himself, at least to some extent, with their teachings. In that event he might not have discolored the judicial ermine with the large black spot which he has left ineffaceably fixed upon it, and he might have saved the chairman of the committee from the mournful but imperative duty of denouncing his action, which he has done in his "views submitted," as "gross usurpation," a judgment which will receive the sanction of the profession throughout the world.

On the night of the 5th of December, 1872, about the hour of eleven, in the presence of solicitors for complainants and surrounded by his guards, Judge Durell, by a private note—for I can call it nothing else, it had no mark of judicial process upon it—ordered the marshal of Louisiana forthwith to take possession of the state-house; and three hours afterward Captain Jackson, with his batteries and his soldiers, held that position. I will not charge that the President was conniving at this flagrant and lawless usurpation, but I will say that there was a remarkable coincidence between the action of the court and the opportune arrival of the troops; such a coincidence as would fasten a suspicion of guilt upon any man less cautious in his exercise of power and less particular in his observance of law. The committee in their report say the Federal court had no more right to seize the state-house than to seize this Capitol, and I adopt the sentiment.

The labors of Judge Durell at this critical period appear to have been perfectly herculean. The called session of the Legislature was to meet on the 9th, and he had no time to lose. He was engaged until near midnight on the 5th with his military order for the seizure of the state-house. On the 6th he filed a voluminous opinion in the Kellogg case, deciding that Longstreet and his associates were the legal returning board; and on the 7th he issued an order enjoining more than one hundred men from participating in the organization of the senate and house of representatives, and restraining the rest of the human family, or a good part of them, from aiding, abetting, or assisting, in any way whatever. I might paraphrase the language of the committee and say that he had no more right to interfere in the organization of that Legislature than to assume to direct the proceedings of this body; but instead of that I will say that if there ever was a judge upon earth who made such a record for himself in the space of three days, his name is lost to history and has faded forever from the memory of men. During the progress of, and for a long time after, these fearfully perilous political military exercises, he was closely guarded, night and day, sleeping and waking. Whether they were afraid that he would be killed or stolen does not appear; but when in repose they stood near him, and when he walked—which he sometimes did in the early morning or the cool of the evening—they followed him. Marshal Packard, in his evidence, seems to have been as solicitous to save the judge's feelings as he had previously been to shield him from danger; for he says he does not think that the judge knew that he was guarded "hardly any of the time." As the guards occupied a room adjoining his own, and trailed him wherever he went, it is difficult to understand how he was ignorant of their presence; for if he opened a door in his house, or looked over his shoulder on the street, he was bound to see them; but perhaps the judge was not given to opening doors, and perhaps he never looked behind.

Society is strangely and wonderfully organized, and the transitions from savage to civilized life and from paganism to Christianity render it impossible for us to determine to what extent we may yet be the subjects of old delusions and old superstitions. The ancients translated their heroes and sages to the stars, and worshiped them among the heavenly hosts. Whether we have inherited a sort of inward faith in the divinity of human nature, or to whatever cause you may assign it, there is a large proportion of every community who, while they may not justify, will palliate and extenuate every offense. An unseen hand scattered fragrance over the grave of Nero; and from that day to this there has been no offender, great or small, as to whose guilt or innocence there was not conflict of opinion. "He must have had strong provocation," "He was insane," or "Some aberration or hallucination clouded his intellect, or he could not have done the deed"—these, and a thousand other things, are surmised merely in mitigation. But in the case before us the door is rudely closed against friendly conjecture by the desperate energy with which Marshal Packard swears that Judge Durell was not drunk when he signed the order. [Laughter.]

I have already spoken of the wonderful tenacity with which the Lynch board clung to their offices. Bovee was clearly ineligible under the law, as he was a candidate, and by turning to page 219 of the evidence you will see that he signs the certificate of his own election. But that was a trifling circumstance compared with the other difficulties under which they labored. At the suit of Warmoth, that board was enjoined from any action whatever, and at the suit of Armstead it was restrained from canvassing any except the official returns; and both these injunctions from the State court were undissolved and in full force throughout their action in the premises. More than that; a law was approved on the 20th day of November, 1872, abolishing their offices altogether. Two valid injunctions, backed by the positive provisions of a repealing statute, would have presented a formidable obstacle to ordinary men; but Longstreet's military experience taught him that a judge without jurisdiction, when backed by the Army of the United States, would be irresistible in the conflict. [Laughter.] Immediately after the approval of the law to which I have referred as abolishing all former boards, the De Feriet board was appointed, and the conclusion cannot be avoided that their returns are entitled to full credit, and that McEnery and his associates were legally, fairly, and constitutionally elected.

But I will continue the review, which I had commenced, of the proceedings of the Longstreet board, only premising that I will not consume one-tenth of the time which it would require to search out all the strange irregularities with which they abound, but only calling attention to a few of the more important facts. There was not an official return before this board, not one signed by a State officer, and no witness was sworn, examined, and cross-examined before them. How was it possible, under such circumstances, to arrive at any just result? By what light were they guided in their deliberations? Bovee says they were slightly influenced by statements not under oath, and letters, and one thing and another. This looks more encouraging; it begins to look like business; but as I do not wish to consume time, I will give you Bovee's account of their mode of procedure in working up the vote of a single parish; and as it is short I will take that of La Fourche:

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Lafourche, William Murrell, and John Bibolet?
A. We had the same character of reports from that parish; page 128 of the President's message refers particularly to it.
Q. What was the general character of it?
A. A number of persons appeared to have voted twice; some who voted were under age. The affidavits showed, or at least a certain number it was shown had been voted twice.
Q. Did you throw out the votes?
A. No, sir.
Q. Did you make a deduction of those illegal votes?
A. Yes, sir; and added those that were refused who had the right to vote.
Q. That is, you counted some affidavits?
A. Yes, sir.
Q Did you have the affidavits?
A. We had the affidavits of the Federal supervisor, showing the state of things that existed there.
Q. You mean his statement?
A. Yes, sir; also his affidavit.
Q. Was it upon his affidavit that you counted certain votes?
A. Yes, sir. I think that portion of the President's message shows exactly the character of it.
Q. Did you count those votes on the affidavit of the supervisor, or did you have the affidavits of the men who did not get to vote?
A. On the affidavit of the supervisor, based on the evidence of the affidavits themselves.
Q. Did you have those affidavits?
A. No, sir; not the particular affidavits. I think they were taken in a body.
Q. How many votes did you count on the supervisor's affidavit?
A. There were from 30 to 50. I do not remember exactly.
Q. How many did you reject on his affidavit for being under age, &c.?
A. I think we rejected in all about 60 or 70.
Q. And counted 40 or 50?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Making a difference of 150 votes?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. That gave this man a majority?
A. Yes, sir.

The key that unlocks this riddle may be found in the last sentence: "That gave this man a majority." What he says of "affidavits in a body" is very liable to be misunderstood and misconstrued. He evidently does not refer to a number of affidavits attached together, nor does he refer to a single affidavit bearing the names of many affiants, but it is altogether more likely that the reference is to an abstract or certificate from Woolfley, the clerk of the Federal court and chief supervisor of Louisiana, who, though in nowise connected with the returning board, seems to have held the affidavits, and, consequently, the balance of power in his hands. But that which creates the most surprise is that a Federal officer should have been able to discriminate with such remarkable accuracy, and with such slight opportunities of observation, concerning the ages of those who were momentarily in his presence. Does the fifteenth article of amendment of the Constitution provide for anything of that sort? It does not; but something must be done to give that "man a majority."

A revolution was effected in the parish of Tangipahoa in a manner so strange, that I shall advert to it for a moment. A man by the name of Barkdull was sent there to take proof of fraud. He passed over the parish twice, making inquiries wherever he went, and came to the conclusion that the election had been fair. But Wands, who was the defeated candidate for the Legislature, told him "That would not do; that will defeat us." They started out together, and as they could find no one who had been wrongfully deprived of suffrage, Wands gave him two hundred and fifty names of persons who, as far as his investigations went, had voted already. Wands sent for a newspaper reporter by the name of Richardson, who made affidavit that the colored people were so intimidated that they would not come out; a fact of which the colored people themselves were entirely ignorant. Wands also procured the reluctant signatures of an old hotel-keeper and two Germans and another man to similar affidavits. The old man said, "I will sign the paper, but Mr. Wands promised me the post-office; and I want you to see that I get the appointment." These were the affidavits accompanying the report of intimidation, and freighted, as I contend, with two hundred and fifty votes to be counted in fraud of the rights of the opposition and in manifest and palpable violation of law.

But notwithstanding the satisfactory character of the proof, there was an unexpected difficulty in the way. About 1,380 votes had been cast in the parish, and the published estimate of one vote to five souls showed that it only contained about 1,580; so that, to use a phrase current in Louisiana, it would not "hold" the two hundred and fifty names reported by Barkdull. The difficulty was serious, but not insurmountable. By a deduction of 150 or 160 votes from the democratic and an addition of a similar number to the republican candidates the end was attained, with fifty votes to be transferred to the account of profit and loss. This was a most adroit and skillful maneuver, but it was nevertheless required to give that "man a majority."

I might say something about Henry E. Robinson, who, as deputy marshal, decided at the polls that men without registration papers should vote, a matter he had no more right to decide upon than you or I, and even less, if possible, as he decided it in the teeth of the law. As United States commissioner, he appointed deputies to assist him in collecting evidence of fraud, but as he only returned about four hundred and fifty affidavits, and as from his evidence he seems to be a very young man, I will pass him by in silence.

From Rapides one thousand affidavits were counted, although the difference between the registered and the polled vote was less than that number.

In the parishes of Bossier and Natchitoches, where more than 3,000 votes were polled, and where McEnery had a clear majority of nearly 1,100, every vote cast was ignored, and more than twenty-three hundred affidavits were counted for Kellogg, besides reversing the representation in the Legislature. Wherever the parish of Bossier occurs in the returns of the Lynch board, you will see 1,159 votes for the republicans, and where Natchitoches occurs you will see 1,206 for the same ticket, and none for the opposition. There was no scratching there; nothing counted save affidavits. No wonder that the Senator from Indiana desired that this evidence should be buried forever from his sight.

From Caddo Parish one hundred and fifty affidavits were triplicates, and sometimes there were four copies by the same party, at the same time, in the same handwriting, and with the same names of persons.

But of all the men who made or lost reputation in this hunt after fraud, the name of Theodore Jaques stands pre-eminent. In company with Judge Prescott, he embarked for the parish of Plaquemines on a steam-launch belonging to the Government, and there is no telling how much of the people's money has been expended in defrauding them of their rights. These enterprising citizens, after a short voyage, attended, I am sorry to say, with no fatal disaster, returned to New Orleans with thirteen hundred and fourteen affidavits, one of which was signed by the party who made it; three hundred bore authorized signatures, if you could call it so, obtained as they were; and one thousand and thirteen were palpable, downright forgeries; the names having been taken from poll-books or somewhere else, and no one knowing whether the parties were dead or alive. Judge Prescott signed the certificates in blank, which greatly facilitated the operation. Among the men of straw who figured in these affidavits, old John Doe was not forgotten; but fresh as he was a thousand years ago, and still the patron of litigation and strife, he seems to have voted the regular national republican ticket. [Laughter on the floor and in the galleries.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will remind persons occupying seats in the gallery that any manifestation of approbation or disapprobation is in violation of the rule of the Senate; and if the rule be again violated, the Chair will order the galleries to be cleared. The Chair will also request persons on the floor standing in the rear of the railing to find seats provided for their accommodation in the Senate Chamber.

Mr. McCREERY. But the dramatic part of the performance had not come yet. Jaques, loaded down with his spoils, was approaching the board. Bovee saw him first and sprang to meet him in the hall, exclaiming in rapture, "Jaques, you are a hell of a fellow!" Jaques might have returned the compliment, for it was so intended; but he was a little nettled at the remark, as it implied that he had done his utmost, and he meant to give a most emphatic contradiction to any such disparaging inference. Then, drawing himself up, with that lofty air of indifference which great men assume when speaking of their most renowned achievements, he carelessly observed, "George, if you want a few more, I can get you some by ten o'clock in the morning." Jaques had artfully held back two hundred and fifty or so, to meet precisely such a contingency as this; and Bovee, perceiving at a glance that he had made a sad blunder, laughed it off, and afterward occasionally would make the jocular inquiry, "If Plaquemines had done voting yet?" But that retort of Jaques, although it was treated as a piece of pleasantry at the time, left a sting behind. It was entirely too familiar, in the first place, and then it almost asserted that the pretended gravity of their proceedings was little better than a ridiculous farce. The prudence and circumspection of Prescott were in marked contrast with the vaporing bluster of Jaques, and he was appointed parish judge of Plaquemines; while the conceited braggart fell a victim to his unbridled loquacity, and got nothing at all. I said he got nothing; but he did receive $105 from one of the candidates, as well as some promises that he should be reinstated in the custom-house.

But why multiply instances when John Lynch stated on his examination that they did not count, but estimated, the vote on the basis of what they thought it ought to have been, and when Bovee declares boldly under oath that they were determined to have the Legislature? Men actuated by such motives would never fail to arrive at a conclusion satisfactory to themselves. In order to give their proceedings some shade or semblance of official sanction, Bovee pretended, and said on oath that as United States commissioner in the parish of Saint James, he kept a tally-list just like the clerk, when the returns showed that he only kept the votes polled for the republican candidates. To the important question whether any of the affidavits stated that the parties had been denied the right to vote on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, John Lynch answered, "Yes, sir; quite a number of them." Four pages afterward, in the same examination, and to the same interrogatory, he makes what might be termed an evasive answer, still implying that at least a portion of them contained the statement, when in truth and in fact there was no reference to race, color, or previous condition in any affidavit from beginning to end. I do not intend to impute falsehood to Mr. Lynch, for it is highly probable that he never saw one of the affidavits except those brought in by Jaques, the clerk of the Federal court holding the balance; but I emphasize the facts, because they make void, and worse than void, the legal proceedings by which Kellogg and company were invested with offices which by every principle of right and of law belonged to McEnery and his associates.

The Senator from Indiana said, if I understood him correctly, he had never seen a man who thought McMillen ought to be admitted to a seat on this floor. I do not suppose that he made a very diligent search for that man.

Let us pause for a moment and consider some of the marvelous results brought about by the strange proceedings of the Lynch board. A man occupies the executive chair who was defeated by thousands. Members are sitting in the house of representatives simply because they were the only ones who put in claims for the seats. And concerning the senate, I will read the official returns from six consecutive districts, and see if any man here can guess in a single instance to whom the Lynch board awarded the certificates. In the nineteenth district Graham got 1,511 votes, Hodge 938, and Greene 719, with 37 scattering. It would look to be not probable, but I think the Lynch board awarded the certificate in that case to Greene, who got the smallest number of votes. In the twentieth district, McDonald received 4,178, and Blackburn 2,466 votes. Blackburn got the certificate of the Lynch board there.

Mr. WEST. Will the Senator be kind enough to state the page he is reading from?

Mr. McCREERY. I am reading from the returns of the DeFeriet board, pages 295 and 296.

In the twenty-first senatorial district Leonard received 1,863 votes, and William Harper 1,498. Harper, I think, got the certificate of the Lynch board. In the twenty-second district C. J. C. Puckett received 3,821 votes, and Raford Blunt 1,503 votes. Blunt got the certificate. In the twenty-third district White received 2,680 votes, and Kelso 1,169 votes. Kelso got the certificate. In the twenty-fourth senatorial district Hawkes received 620 votes, Kelly 1,274, and Alexander 741. Alexander, I believe, got the certificate of the Lynch board. I am willing that these facts should rest upon the minds of Senators, without one word of comment.

Much has been said in the various reports about government, and the committee make their acknowledgments to President Lincoln for the best definition of a republican government in the English tongue—"a government of the people, by the people, for the people." Without the slightest disposition to disparage that President in any particular, I can say that I do not regard that as any definition of a representative republican government like our own at all. It is a good definition of a pure democracy, where the masses of the people assemble and participate in legislation; but the representative feature in our system is omitted altogether. Whether Lincoln and the committee were right or wrong is a matter of little consequence, as he was never called upon to define, and never did define, the institution inaugurated by Judge Durell in the State of Louisiana; but if he had been elected governor of Illinois by eight or ten thousand majority, and a Federal judge, backed by the Army of the United States, and proceeding upon immaterial and forged affidavits, had installed his opponent, then there would have been a definition given which would have been read and understood by the world.

The fourth section of the fourth article of the Constitution provides that the United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government. The future is employed, showing that there was no limitation as to time, but that the obligation, as well as the right secured, should coexist with the Government itself. It is a solemn and perpetual guarantee that the States and the people of the States shall not be disturbed in their republican institutions. Whether the enemy rise within or invade from abroad, he may receive no quarter if he come to assail that which the organic law has declared shall be inviolate forever.

What, then, is a republic or a republican form of government? Noah Webster says it is "a state in which the sovereign power is exercised by representatives elected by the people;" or, to vary the phraseology to a negative so as to render its application more direct to the matter in hand, a state in which the sovereign power is exercised by persons not elected by the people is not a republic. This derivation of power from the people by their own election is an essential requisite, whether the word is taken in its primary sense of common affairs, or in its more general acceptation among us. But the chairman of the committee seems, without argument, to take it for granted that Louisiana has a republican form of government. If he understands the word "form" to mean show without substance, empty outside appearance, trivial conventional ceremony, then he is right; but if it means a mode of construction, a mode of organization, a system involving a regular harmonious union of principles, which it does mean when applied to government, then he is wrong. To say that a thing must be done for the sake of form or ceremony, implies, in my judgment, that it had better not be done at all. It was in no such sense that the word found its way into the Constitution. It would have been too light for the scales that weighed the words that went into that instrument. Instead of a snare and a delusion, it was intended to be a substantial guarantee of a substantial right—a right which no President even, much less a subaltern, should ever strike down or destroy. But there is also a form of government which is unrestrained by and regardless of constitution and law, having no respect for either, and that is the pure, genuine article of unadulterated despotism; and the Kellogg government in its form or mode of organization is either republican or despotic.

The chairman of the committee, in his views accompanying the report, says that "the Government of the United States is not a Don Quixote, going forth to hunt up and redress all the wrongs that may be inflicted upon the people in any part of the country." If this is true, I tell you in all seriousness and in all candor you will have to put up your Rosinante. In the bounds of your party you can certainly find some place-hunting Sancho Panza who will take charge of him. Is he to go rearing, pitching, and prancing, with no bridle to check him in his wild career, trampling under his rough-shod feet all the guarantees which give us a home in a free land? If he is not stopped at once and punished for his fantastic judicial performances the sails of many a windmill will be furled before the frosts of November, 1876, shall descend upon us.

Mr. SHERMAN. Unless some Senator desires to speak upon the resolution, following the suggestion of the Senator occupying the chair, I now move that this matter be postponed until Wednesday next.

Mr. MORTON. I hope not. A Senator present has expressed his purpose to speak.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves that the subject now under consideration be laid over until Wednesday next.

The motion was agreed to.

THE CURRENCY—SPECIE PAYMENTS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now move that the Senate resume the consideration of the resolution reported by the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPherson, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 971) to forfeit to the United States certain lands granted to the Placerville and Sacramento Valley Railroad Company to aid in constructing a railroad from the town of Folsom to the town of Placerville, in the State of California; and

A bill (H. R. 1168) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for the removal of the Flathead and other Indians from the Bitter Root Valley, in the Territory of Montana," approved June 5, 1872.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 61) providing for busts of the late Chief Justice Roger Brooke Taney and of Salmon Portland Chase, to be placed in the Supreme Court Room of the United States.

ENROLLED BILLS.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills:

A bill (H. R. No. 795) making appropriations to pay for reporting the debates and proceedings of Congress; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1218) to provide for the purchase of fire-extinguishers for the Capitol building.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Several executive messages have been received from the President. I therefore move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and seventeen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, January 26, 1874.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. Butler, D. D.

The Journal of Saturday last was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This being Monday, the first business in order is the call of the States and Territories, beginning with the State of Maine, for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions for reference to their appropriate committees, not to be brought back on motions to reconsider. Under this call memorials and resolutions of State and territorial Legislatures may be presented for reference and printing. The morning hour begins at three minutes after twelve o'clock.

PRINTING OF BILLS.

During the call of the States for the introduction of bills, &c.,

The SPEAKER said: Under the obvious construction which the House gave last week to the rule concerning the printing of bills and joint resolutions introduced for reference, they will all be printed unless the member introducing requests that it be not done, as nine-tenths of them are asked to be printed, anyway.

CURRENCY.

Mr. BURLEIGH introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1408) to redeem legal-tender notes, and regulate and establish the currency of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES M. HAGAR.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1409) for the relief of James M. Hagar, of Richmond, Maine; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CLERKS IN SPRINGFIELD ARMORY.

Mr. DAWES introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1410) to fix the salaries of the clerks at the United States armory in Springfield, Massachusetts; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

POST NO. 38, GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Massachusetts, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1411) to donate seven condemned cannon and twenty-eight cannon-balls to Post No. 38, of the Grand Army of the Republic, of Cambridge, Massachusetts; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PROVIDENCE RIVER, RHODE ISLAND.

Mr. EAMES introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1412) making an appropriation for improvements in Providence River, Rhode Island; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

MRS. HANNAH W. SUMNER.

Mr. DUELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1413) to increase the pension of Mrs. Hannah W. Sumner, widow of Major-General Edwin V. Sumner, who died March 21, 1863, while in command of the Department of the West; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

SUSAN BENNETT.

Mr. PERRY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1414) granting a pension to Susan Bennett; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

DEWIGHT DESILVA.

Mr. PLATT, of New York, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1415) for the relief of Dewight Desilva, of Deposit, New York; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

W. L. ROBINSON.

Mr. SMART introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1416) to reimburse W. L. Robinson, postmaster at Galesville, New York; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, BROOKLYN, NEW YORK.

Mr. SCHUMAKER, of New York, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1417) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to condemn a site for a public building in the city of Brooklyn; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION.

Mr. WARD, of New Jersey, presented the following concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of the State of New Jersey; which were read, referred to the Select Committee on the Centennial Celebration and the Proposed National Census of 1875, and ordered to be printed:

Whereas the Congress of the United States has, by an act passed in 1871, provided for the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of American Independence, in the city of Philadelphia, and the President of the United States has by proclamation invited the attention of all nations to this celebration; and whereas it is absolutely essential to the success of this proposed celebration that a considerable sum of money should be promptly raised: Therefore,

Resolved, (the house of assembly concurring,) That we request the Senators and Representatives in Congress from New Jersey to vote for such an appropriation as shall enable those having the matter in charge to discharge the duties devolved upon them in accordance with the requirements of the occasion.

Resolved, That a copy of this preamble and resolution be forwarded to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

REAR-ADMIRAL B. F. SANDS.

Mr. SCOFIELD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1418) to retain Rear-Admiral B. F. Sands upon the active list of the Navy; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PENSIONS FOR SERVICES IN THE MEXICAN WAR.

Mr. NEGLEY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1419) granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the war of 1846 with Mexico, and the widows of deceased soldiers and sailors; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and, with accompanying papers, ordered to be printed.

CHARLES HOFFMAN.

Mr. McJUNKIN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1420) for the relief of Charles Hoffman, late a second lieutenant of infantry in Company E of the Seventy-eighth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MRS. CAROLINE DUNCAN.

Mr. MAGEE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1421) to place the name of Mrs. Caroline Duncan on the pension-rolls; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

PROMOTIONS IN MARINE CORPS.

Mr. ARCHER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1422) to regulate promotions in the staff of the Marine Corps; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MARY LOGSDON.

Mr. LOWNDES introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1423) granting a pension to Mary Logsdon, widow of Joseph Logsdon, deceased, of Maryland; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

EXCHEQUER.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1424) for the establishment of an exchequer; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

BANKRUPTCY.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1425) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved March 2, 1867; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

SAMUEL P. GAUSE.

Mr. WADDELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1426) for the relief of Samuel P. Gause, of Wilmington, North Carolina; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

DAVID A. TELFAIR.

Mr. SMITH, of North Carolina, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1427) to remove the disabilities of David A. Telfair, of North Carolina; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

ANSON B. SAINS.

Mr. VANCE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1428) for the relief of Anson B. Sains; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

SITE FOR MILITARY PURPOSES.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1429) to authorize the purchase of a site for military purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

SURVEY OF OCONEE RIVER, GEORGIA.

Mr. COOK introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1430) asking an appropriation for the survey of Oconee River, in the State of Georgia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

JASPER N. MARTIN.

Mr. BELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1431) granting a pension to Jasper N. Martin; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

VALINA HUTCHISON.

Mr. BELL also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1432) granting a pension to Valina Hutchison; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

WESLEY JONES.

Mr. BELL also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1433) granting a pension to Wesley Jones; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ELIZABETH WOODS.

Mr. BELL also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1434) for the relief of Elizabeth Woods; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ALABAMA LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. HAYS presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Alabama instructing her Senators and Representatives in Congress to use their influence to secure to the State the amount due from the United States on account of the claim of 5 per cent. on the lands within the State taken up by land warrants and used by the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

PAYMENT OF PENSIONS.

Mr. SLOSS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1435) to provide for the payment of pensions through the postmasters; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

REVERTED LAND GRANTS.

Mr. SLOSS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1436) to perfect the title to certain lands, heretofore granted to the State of Alabama to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said State, which had reverted to the United States by reason of said railroads not being completed within the time prescribed by law, in the actual settlers on said land after the same had reverted to the United States, and before the enactment of any law renewing and reviving said grants; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

HOMESTEADS.

Mr. CALDWELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1437) to allow actual settlers on homesteads to make final affidavit before any officers legally authorized to administer oaths; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

EMILY PHILLIPS.

Mr. BUNDY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1438) granting a pension to Emily Phillips, widow of Martin Phillips; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN FOLGER.

Mr. SPRAGUE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1439) granting a pension to John Folger; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

SAMUEL TAYLOR.

Mr. SOUTHARD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1440) to place the name of Samuel Taylor on the pension-roll; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

PAY OF MEMBERS.

Mr. GUNCKEL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1441) to repeal so much of the act of March 3, 1873, as provides that Representatives and Delegates elect to Congress may receive their compensation monthly from the beginning of their term until the beginning of the first session of Congress; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL CEMETERIES.

Mr. GUNCKEL also introduced a bill (H. R. No 1442) to amend an act to establish and protect national cemeteries, approved February 22, 1867, so as to make the provision of said act, and all acts amendatory thereto, applicable to the cemeteries of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and to include soldiers who have been, or may hereafter be, buried therein; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

HIRAM H. EGLESTON.

Mr. BERRY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1443) for the relief of Hiram H. Egleston; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

RESOLUTIONS OF TENNESSEE LEGISLATURE.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee. I present joint resolutions of the Thirty-eighth General Assembly of the State of Tennessee, which I ask to be read, and as they are read I will move the proper reference.

INTERNATIONAL WEATHER REPORTS.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Tennessee, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress are hereby requested to use their influence in securing such an appropriation by the Congress of the United States for establishing an international system of crop and weather reports, with branches in each State, with a view of guarding and protecting the agricultural interest against the combinations of speculators, as may render said system thoroughly national and international, and worthy alike of the Government and people of the United States.

Resolved, That a copy of the foregoing joint resolution, duly certified, be presented to our Senators and Representatives in Congress with the least avoidable delay.

Adopted February 8, 1873.

W. S. McGAUGHEY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
A. T. LACY,
Speaker of the Senate.

Approved February 17, 1873.

JNO. C. BROWN,
Governor.

Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

THE MEXICAN WAR AND INDIAN WAR OF 1836.

The Clerk next read as follows:

Whereas, as a testimonial of the esteem and grateful recollection in which this nation holds those who have imperiled their lives in her cause, as a sacred duty which she owes the survivors of the war with Mexico and the Indian war of 1836, and in view of the fact that those who fought at Monterey, Buena Vista, and Molino del Rey, and in the Indian war of 1836, have, as yet, not received that return which their services demanded: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Tennessee, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to ask the national Congress to place the names of the survivors of the war against Mexico, and the Indian war of 1836, upon the pension-roll of the Government on an equal footing with those of 1812-'15.

Be it further resolved, That a copy of this preamble and accompanying resolution be sent to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Adopted February 8, 1873.

W. S. McGAUGHEY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
A. T. LACEY,
Speaker of the Senate.

Approved February 17, 1873.

JNO. C. BROWN,
Governor.

The resolutions were referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

CENTENNIAL EXHIBITION.

The Clerk next read as follows:

Whereas the Congress of the United States, by an act approved March 3, 1871, has provided for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of American Independence, by an international exposition of American and foreign arts, products, and manufactures, to be held, under the auspicies of the Government of the United States, in the city of Philadelphia, commencing in April and ending in October, in the year 1876; and whereas, by a subsequent act, approved June 1, 1872, an act of incorporation was passed by Congress looking to the formation of a joint-stock company with a capital stock of $10,000,000, whereby to provide means adequate for said exhibition; and whereas the apportionment of stock for Tennessee, under said act of incorporation, is much larger than the financial condition of our people may justify them in subscribing; and whereas the mode of raising funds for celebrating the hundredth anniversary of American Independence by joint-stock subscription necessarily tends to convert a great national occasion into a mere money-getting speculation, is inconsistent with the patriotic memories it is intended to commemorate, and utterly unworthy of the people whose liberty it is designed to fittingly immortalize: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Tennessee, That our Senators be instructed, and our Representatives requested, to propose, advocate, and sustain by their votes such an appropriation by Congress for said centennial exhibition as may be necessary to make said proposed celebration thoroughly national and international, and worthy alike of the Government and people of the United States: Provided, That said appropriation shall not be given in aid of any corporation for that purpose.

Resolved, That a copy of the foregoing joint resolution, duly certified, be forwarded to our Senators and Representatives in Congress, with the least avoidable delay.

Adopted February 25, 1873.

A. T. LACEY,
Speaker of the Senate.
W. S. McGAUGHEY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved March 8, 1873.

JNO. C. BROWN,
Governor.

The resolutions were referred to the Committee on the Centennial Celebration and the Proposed National Census of 1875, and ordered to be printed.

CHEAP TRANSPORTATION.

The Clerk next read as follows:

Whereas the governor of this State, in accordance with a resolution passed by a general convention held at Cincinnati, February 20, 1872, to consider means necessary to secure from the Government such action as would render the Ohio River and its tributaries, and the Tennessee and Cumberland Rivers, reliable, commodious, and cheap transportation highways—demanded by the people of the West—did, in joint action with the governors of the States of Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Kentucky, Tennessee, West Virginia, and Pennsylvania, create and appoint five commissioners to act in harmony and conjunction with a similar number of commissioners of the other named States, to the end that a board of commissioners should exist, through whom and by whose exertions the Government of the United States should, with the least possible delay, enter upon the work of making the Ohio and its tributaries, especially the Tennessee and Cumberland Rivers, all that is required to meet the wants of the internal commerce of the country for inland navigation; and whereas the seven States represented by this commission, and the seven other great States bordering on the Mississippi Valley, contain quite one-half of the whole population of the nation; produce quite 60 per cent. of the farm products of the country; to whom cheap transportation is a necessity, and an urgent need; and whereas in consequence of the high rates for railroad transportation, the cost of farm products is enormously enhanced to the consumer, increasing the cost of the skilled labor necessary to the development of the mineral resources of the country without any direct or indirect benefit to the laborer himself; destroying the profits of the agriculturist, and thus impairing the value of farm labor, to the depression of wages for agricultural labor, and the discouragement of capital from embarking in agricultural development; and whereas the present as well as the future interest of this and other States is injured by reason of the want of cheap transportation, the development of their resources delayed, and the field for agricultural recompense impoverished; and whereas it is the duty of the legislators of the nation to create all such facilities of a public character as will give its people cheap food, its population a demand for well-paid labor, and the nation all that political power and public prosperity that may arise or can be produced through an active, broad development of its resources: Therefore,

Resolved, That we consider the improvement of our water lines as indispensable to the production of cheap transportation; as a powerful stimulant to the creation of manufactured as well as agricultural products, and as the means of furnishing the necessities of life at a low rate to the consumer.

Resolved, That while mindful of the importance of increased railroad transportation, and the duty of the encouragement thereof, yet in view of the rapid growth of the nation, and the cheapness with which large quantities of freight can be moved on water, we declare that it is essential to the interest of the people of the whole nation that our internal river navigation should receive the immediate attention of our General Government; and any money set apart to place the Ohio, Tennessee, and Cumberland Rivers in a reliable, commodious, and navigable condition is not only a wise appropriation of public money, but one that the agricultural population of the whole West demands.

Resolved, That the seven States of the Ohio Valley, containing tenfold the amount of those minerals and manufacturing resources which have given Great Britain her past political and financial power, and having one-third the population of the na tion, producing two-fifths of all the farm products of the country, and having paid into the Treasury of the nation, under the internal-revenue laws, one-third of the sum thus collected, are but insisting upon an indefeasible right in asking that the Government of the United States shall expend upon the Ohio, Tennessee, and Cumberland Rivers, and other tributaries, such sums as will render their immense mineral resources remunerative to the States and the nation, and give to so large a proportion of the entire nation, which produces so great a share of the food of the whole people, and has paid so heavy a proportion of the governmental expenses and its debts, such ample internal water transportation as the rivers of those States can be made to afford and is demanded by the wants of their internal commerce.

Resolved, That we recognize the authority of the joint commission created by the joint action of the governors of the Ohio Valley States, and we hereby indorse their action to secure adequate and proper appropriations by the Government of the United States in behalf of this great public enterprise committed to their charge.

Resolved, To the more fully giving countenance and the support of this State, that we hereby instruct our Senators to aid them by action in the Senate of the United States, and hereby earnestly request our Representatives of the various districts of this State to give the request of this joint board of commissioners their combined, hearty, and earnest support.

Resolved, That the governor of this State is hereby instructed to forward a copy of these preambles and resolutions to each Senator and Representative of this State.

Adopted February 21, 1873.

A. T. LACEY,
Speaker of the Senate.
W. S. MCGAUGHEY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved March 7, 1873.

JNO. C. BROWN,
Governor.

The resolutions were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

STRAWBERRY PLAINS HIGH SCHOOL.

Mr. THORNBURGH introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1444) for the relief of the Strawberry Plains High School, East Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed.

W. H. EDWARDS.

Mr. THORNBURGH also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1445) to reinstate W. H. Edwards on the pension-rolls; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ABRAHAM SMITH.

Mr. HARRISON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1446) for the relief of Abraham Smith, of Nashville, Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ALFRED FLY.

Mr. WHITTHORNE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1447) for the relief of Alfred Fly, of Stewart County, Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SOLDIERS OF SEMINOLE AND FLORIDA WARS.

Mr. ATKINS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1448) granting pensions to the soldiers of the Seminole and Florida wars; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

COLLECTION OF DUTIES ON MERCHANDISE.

Mr. MAYNARD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1449) to facilitate the collection of duties on merchandise imported into the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

MISSION OF SAINT JAMES.

Mr. PACKARD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1450) for the relief of the Mission of Saint James in Washington Territory; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE W. REYNOLDS.

Mr. PACKARD also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1451) granting a pension to George W. Reynolds; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

EMOLDS LLOYD.

Mr. ORTH. I am requested by my colleague, Mr. CASON, who has been called home by illness in his family, to present for him several bills. The first is a bill (H. R. No. 1452) for the relief of Emolds Lloyd, Montgomery County, Indiana.

The bill was received, read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MARGARET J. BOYD, ET AL.

Mr. ORTH (also for Mr. CASON) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1453) granting a pension to Margaret J. Boyd, Rachel D. McIlvaine, and William L. McIlvaine; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

COLONEL WILLIAM C. KISE.

Mr. ORTH (also for Mr. CASON) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1454) granting a pension to Colonel William C. Kise; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

J. C. HANNUM.

Mr. ORTH (also for Mr. CASON) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1455) for the relief of J. C. Hannum, late postmaster at Delphi, Indiana; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

MRS. MARY J. ORR.

Mr. ORTH also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1456) for the relief of Mrs. Mary J. Orr, widow of Hon. James L. Orr, late envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Russia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL CURRENCY.

Mr. ORTH. I have on my desk, and shall introduce under the rules, petitions numerously signed by citizens of forty-two counties of my State, asking for the passage of a law by Congress known as the "Indiana plan of financial relief;" and in accordance with the prayer of said petitioners I now introduce the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk, and which I ask to have printed and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The bill (H. R. No. 1457) to provide a national currency, for the redemption thereof in coin, and for the redemption of circulating notes heretofore issued by or under the authority of the United States, was read a first and second time, and, with accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

BUREAU OF LABOR.

Mr. SHANKS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1458) establishing a Bureau of Labor, providing for the appointment of a commissioner thereof, and defining his duties; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed.

LAND GRANTS IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. SHANKS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1459) repealing acts and parts of acts granting lands and certain privileges in the Indian Territory to railroad companies; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT IN THE INDIAN COUNTRY.

Mr. SHANKS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1460) establishing a United States district court in the Indian country; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

SHIP-CANAL.

Mr. SHANKS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1461) for a survey by Army and Navy engineers of a ship-canal from Lake Michigan to the Mississippi River at or near Cairo, Illinois; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

REPEAL OF AN ACT.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1462) to repeal the fourteenth section of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1871," approved July 15, 1870; which was read a first and second time, and, with an accompanying memorial, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1463) adding to the fifteenth section of the act approved July 20, 1864, in relation to the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

DISBURSING OFFICERS.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Indiana, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1464) in relation to disbursing officers of the United States and United States depositaries with reference to public moneys; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

ERIE LOCK.

Mr. HUNTER introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1465) for the relief of Erie Lock; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

AMOS LASWELL.

Mr. HOLMAN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1466) for the relief of Amos Laswell, of Indiana; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SUGAR-BEET SEED.

Mr. BURCHARD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1467) to provide for the importation of sugar-beet seed free of duty; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

SMITH & MATTHEWS.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1468) for the relief of Smith & Matthews; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and, with accompanying papers, ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH H. MOULTON.

Mr. FORT introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1469) for the relief of Joseph H. Moulton, a volunteer soldier of the Forty-seventh Regiment Illinois Infantry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

AGRICULTURAL REPORT.

Mr. FORT also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1470) to provide for the publication of the last agricultural report; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER AND HARBORS.

Mr. MORRISON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1471) to preserve existing landing places upon, and compensate owners of property taken or damaged in improving, the Mississippi River and harbors; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

HEIRS OF JONATHAN HAINES.

Mr. McNULTA introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1472) for the relief of the heirs of Jonathan Haines, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

PEKIN ALCOHOL MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

Mr. McNULTA also introduded a bill (H. R. No. 1473) for the relief of the Pekin Alcohol Manufacturing Company; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

MARY SINCLAIR.

Mr. HYDE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1474) granting a pension to Mary Sinclair, widow of Francis B. Sinclair, late a pensioner; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

EASTERN AND WESTERN TRANSPORTATION COMPANY.

Mr. BLAND introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1475) to incorporate the Eastern and Western Transportation Company; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

SWAMP LANDS IN MISSOURI.

Mr. BLAND also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1476) to confirm to the State of Missouri the swamp lands selected therein as such, and withheld from market in consequence thereof; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC WORKS OF IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. STONE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1477) to facilitate the execution of and to protect certain public works of improvement; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

REFUNDING OF DUTIES.

Mr. WALDRON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1478) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to refund certain duties collected without authority of law; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

RUSH VALLEY MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. BURROWS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1479) to restore the Rush Valley military reservation in Utah Territory to the public lands; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

ENCOURAGEMENT OF MANUFACTURES.

Mr. FIELD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1480) to encourage manufactures, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Manufactures, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN HALEY.

Mr. FIELD also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1481) granting a pension to John Haley, of Detroit, late corporal Company G, Fifteenth Regiment Michigan Infantry Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

STAMPS ON BANK-CHECKS, ETC.

Mr. FIELD also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1482) to increase the revenue from imports, and to repeal the stamp tax on bank-checks, druggists' goods, and friction matches; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

CONDEMNING PROPERTY FOR USE OF GOVERNMENT.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Michigan, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1483) to authorize proceedings to condemn property for the use of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AT KEY WEST.

Mr. WALLS presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Florida, requesting their delegation in Congress to use their efforts to secure an appropriation for the erection of public buildings at Key West, Florida; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

PROTECTION OF FRONTIER OF TEXAS.

Mr. MILLS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1484) authorizing the Secretary of War to accept the services of a regiment of mounted men for the protection of the frontier of Texas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

DESTRUCTION OF STORE-HOUSE AND GOODS IN TEXAS.

Mr. MILLS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1485) directing the Secretary of War to detail an officer of the Army to go to Freestone County, Texas, and investigate the burning of the store-house and goods of L. R. Worthom, alleged to have been done by soldiers since the war; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

TROOPS IN THE SOUTHERN STATES.

Mr. MILLS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1486) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to remove all troops in the Southern States to the frontier of Texas, for the protection of the people against Indians; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REPEAL OF BANKING ASSOCIATIONS.

Mr. MILLS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1487) to repeal all laws authorizing the formation of associations of persons for the purpose of banking; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

ROBERT SUTHERLAND.

Mr. McCRARY introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1488) for the relief of Robert Sutherland; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

FREE IMPORTATION OF MACHINERY.

Mr. McCRARY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1489) to provide for the importation free of duty of certain machinery; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

DAVENPORT DOWNS.

Mr. McCRARY also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1490) granting a pension to Davenport Downs; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

WILMINGTON AND MANCHESTER RAILROAD.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1491) for the relief of the Wilmington and Manchester Railroad; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES H. DUFFES.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1492) to reimburse James H. Duffes, of Malcom, Iowa, for stamps stolen from his office; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

CIRCUIT COURTS.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1493) relating to the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN S. DICKSON.

Mr. RUSK introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1494) for the relief of John S. Dickson, late captain of paroled prisoners; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

LANDS IN SHEBOYGAN, WISCONSIN.

Mr. ELDREDGE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1495) relating to the disposition of certain lands to be reclaimed in sections 14, 23, and 26, in township 16 north, of range 20, in the county of Sheboygan, in the State of Wisconsin; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

SURVEY AND SALE OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. PAGE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1496) explanatory of the act entitled "An act to reduce the expenses of the survey and sale of the public lands in the United States;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

CONTRACTS FOR SERVILE LABOR.

Mr. LUTTRELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1497) to prohibit contracts for servile labor; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed.

RAILROAD LAND GRANTS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. LUTTRELL also presented the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, asking for the restoration to the public domain of certain lands reserved for railroad purposes in said State; which was read in full, and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands:

Whereas on the 13th day of July, A. D. 1866, Congress passed an act entitled "An act granting aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the town of Folsom to the city of Placerville, in the State of California," in pursuance of which act all the odd-numbered sections within twenty miles of the line of said railroad were withdrawn by letter of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated August 29, 1867, from "sale or location, pre-emption or homestead entries;" and whereas by the terms of said act it is provided to the effect that in case of failure to commence said railroad within one year from the passage of said act, or of failure to complete the whole of said railroad by the 4th day of July, A. D. 1869, that the title to all of said lands should revert to the United States; and whereas since the passage of said act said railroad has not been completed, nor has any portion of the same been constructed for more than six years last past, nor since the passage of the act of Congress making the grant; and whereas by letter dated November 22, A. D. 1869, the Commissioner of the General Land Office decided that said grant could not be restored to the public domain without further legislation by Congress: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate, (the assembly concurring,) That our Senators be instructed and our Representatives in Congress be requested, to introduce and use their influence to procure the passage of such joint resolution or act of Congress as may be necessary to secure the immediate restoration to the public domain of all lands withdrawn for the purpose of aiding the construction of said railroad.

Resolved, That his excellency the governor be, and he is hereby, requested to forward a duly certified copy of these resolutions to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

R. PACHECO,
President of the Senate.
MORRIS M. ESTEE,
Speaker of the Assembly.

Mr. PAGE. I presume that my colleague, [Mr. LUTTRELL,]——

The SPEAKER. No debate is in order during the morning hour of Monday. The resolution is referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

MRS. MARY A. M'COMB.

Mr. DUNNELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1498) for the relief of Mrs. Mary A. McComb; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

J. FRANK M'DOWELL.

Mr. LOWE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1499) for the relief of J. Frank McDowell, late postmaster at Columbus, Kansas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

COLORADO IRRIGATION AND LAND COMPANY.

Mr. COBB, of Kansas, (by request,) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1500) to incorporate the Colorado Canal Irrigation and Land Company, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. COBB, of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced this bill by request, not meaning to indorse its provisions.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, CHARLESTON, WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. HEREFORD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1501) for the relief of the Methodist Episcopal church, Charleston, Kanawha County, West Virginia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

TAXATION OF RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. CROUNSE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1502) declaring lands heretofore granted to certain railroad companies subject to State taxation; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

AGNES AND MARIA DE LEON.

Mr. ELKINS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1503) granting relief to Agnes and Maria De Leon, heirs of Rebecca L. De Leon, for rent of house occupied by United States troops; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ALEXANDER DUVALL.

Mr. ELKINS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1504) for the relief of Alexander Duvall, for property destroyed at Fort Stanton, New Mexico, by United States troops; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

WAR CLAIMS OF NEW MEXICO.

Mr. ELKINS also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1505) authorizing the Secretary of War to ascertain and report the amount necessarily expended by the Territory of New Mexico in organizing, equipping, and maintaining the militia forces during the rebellion; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

WALLA WALLA AND COLUMBIA RAILROAD.

Mr. McFADDEN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1506) to amend an act entitled "An act granting the right of way to the Walla Walla and Columbia Railroad Company, and for other purposes;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed.

ADDITIONAL LAND DISTRICT IN COLORADO.

Mr. CHAFFEE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1507) to create an additional land district in the Territory of Colorado; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

CAPTAIN SETH BONNEY.

Mr. ARMSTRONG introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1508) to restore Captain Seth Bonney to his former rank in the Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

HOLY CROSS MISSION, DAKOTA.

Mr. ARMSTRONG also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1509) for the relief of Holy Cross Mission in the Territory of Dakota; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

CRIMES UNDER POSTAL LAWS.

Mr. ARMSTRONG also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1510) to provide for the punishment of certain crimes under postal laws; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

BREVET COMMISSIONS, INDIAN WARFARE.

Mr. McCORMICK introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1511) allowing brevet commissions for distinguished services in Indian warfare; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

SUPREME COURT OF ARIZONA.

Mr. McCORMICK also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1512) supplemental to an act to provide for holding adjourned terms of the supreme court of Arizona Territory, approved December 24, 1872; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed.

SHOSHONE AND BANNOCK TRIBES OF INDIANS.

Mr. STEELE introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1513) confirming articles of agreement with the Shoshone and Bannock tribes of Indians, and directing the Secretary of the Interior to carry the same into effect, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

DISTRICT FIRE-ALARM TELEGRAPH.

Mr. CHIPMAN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1514) to aid in the construction of a fire-alarm telegraph in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

GUSTAVUS F. JOCKNICK.

Mr. CHIPMAN also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1515) for the relief of Gustavus F. Jocknick; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ELIZA A. FLAMANT.

Mr. CHIPMAN also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1516) for the relief of Eliza A. Flamant; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN F. SMITH.

Mr. CHIPMAN also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1517) for the relief of John F. Smith; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. CHIPMAN also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1518) to provide for ascertaining and settling private land claims in certain States and Territories; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will now hear bills introduced for reference by gentlemen who were not in their seats when their States were called.

MATTHEW O'BRIEN, ETC.

Mr. HUNTON introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1519) for the relief of Matthew O'Brien, Moses Lackey, and Daniel Miner; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

THOMAS M'BRIDE.

Mr. LOFLAND introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1520) for the relief of Thomas McBride; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

CLERKS OF COMMANDANTS.

Mr. LOFLAND also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1521) in relation to clerks of commandants of the navy-yards of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

LEWIS GOODWIN.

Mr. COBB, of North Carolina, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1522) for the relief of Lewis Goodwin, late keeper of the light-vessel at Brant Island Shoal, in the State of North Carolina; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

W. S. M'COMB.

Mr. BLOUNT introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1523) for the relief of W. S. McComb, of the State of Georgia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

LOUISA ROSS.

Mr. STANDEFORD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1524) for the relief of Louisa Ross, widow of Dr. Frederick Ross; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

WIDOW OF COLONEL G. A. LOOMIS.

Mr. KELLOGG, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1525) granting a pension to the widow of Colonel Gustavus A. Loomis; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

DESTITUTE IN ALABAMA.

Mr. HAYS, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 44) providing for furnishing Army rations to the destitute in certain localities of Alabama; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed.

WELLS'S PATENT FOR HAT-BODIES.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the bodies of two petitions which I have presented at the desk, one from hat manufacturers and the other from journeymen hatters.

Mr. KILLINGER. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the gentleman listen and then strike. I say that I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a petition from the hatters and another from the journeymen hatters of Philadelphia against the extension of the Wells patent for forming hat-bodies.

Mr. KILLINGER. I object to the printing.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I move to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot recognize the gentleman for that purpose at present.

HENRY L. CAKE.

Mr. KILLINGER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1526) for the relief of Henry L. Cake; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN F. PORTEOUS.

Mr. RANSIER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1527) for the relief of John F. Porteous, of the State of South Carolina; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

EDWIN C. M'TUREOUS.

Mr. RANSIER also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1528) for the relief of Edwin C. McTureous, of the State of South Carolina; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

HENRY M'KEE.

Mr. RANSIER also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1529) for the relief of Henry McKee, of the State of South Carolina; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

DEPOSITS IN NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. G. F. HOAR, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1530) to prevent the payment of interest on deposits in national banks; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

LIGHT-HOUSE OFF SOLOMON'S LUMP.

Mr. SENER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1531) to establish a light-house off Solomon's Lump, in Kedge's Strait, between Tangier's Sound and Chesapeake Bay; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

NEABSCO CREEK.

Mr. SENER also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1532) making an appropriation for the improvement of Neabsco Creek and Harbor, Virginia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PATENT RIGHTS.

Mr. MYERS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1533) to except the interest of an original inventor in any patent or patent right from the operation of the provisions of the fourteenth section of the bankrupt act; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. MYERS. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CONGER. Should not this bill go to the Committee on Patents? That committee is considering the fourteenth section of the bankrupt act.

Mr. MYERS. I would be glad to have the bill go to the Committee on Patents, and would be satisfied with the result of their consideration. The matter of the bankrupt law, however, is before the Judiciary Committee, and this is an amendment to the bankrupt act.

Mr. CONGER. Under those circumstances I shall not insist on the bill going to the Patent Committee.

The bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

LYDIA A. BURNHAM.

Mr. SMALL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1534) granting a pension to Lydia A. Burnham; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and War of 1812, and ordered to be printed.

REBECCA C. REMICK.

Mr. SMALL also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1535) granting a pension to Rebecca C. Remick; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and War of 1812, and ordered to be printed.

LOCATION OF A BANK.

Mr. HENDEE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1536) to authorize the Irasburgh National Bank of Orleans to change its location and name; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

WATER ROUTES.

Mr. McCRARY, by unanimous consent, presented a memorial on the subject of the water routes, from the American Cheap Transportation Convention; which was referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

REGISTRY OF A VESSEL.

Mr. MERRIAM, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1537) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a certificate of registry and enrollment to the schooner Almira, and to change the name to Minnie Davis; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

REFUNDING OF CUSTOMS DUTIES.

Mr. MERRIAM also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1538) restricting the refunding of customs duties; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

EARLES CARTER.

Mr. MERRIAM also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1539) granting a pension to Earles Carter, a soldier of the war of 1812; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and War of 1812, and ordered to be printed.

PAY OF OFFICERS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. MERRIAM also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1540) to prevent officers of the United States from receiving, or being paid, any money beyond their fixed salaries; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. MERRIAM. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. Why does the gentleman desire to have it referred to the Committee on Appropriations? It belongs to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MERRIAM. No, sir; it is to fix the salaries of officials.

The SPEAKER. Then it ought to go to the Committee on the Civil Service. The Committee on Appropriations have no jurisdiction over it.

Mr. MERRIAM. Well; let it go there.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, and ordered to be printed.

HEIRS OF REAR-ADMIRAL DAHLGREN.

Mr. KELLEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1541) for the relief of the heirs of Rear-Admiral Dahlgren, United States Navy; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN C. CUNNINGHAM.

Mr. LOWE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1542) for the relief of John C. Cunningham, of Fort Gibson, Indian Territory, for supplies furnished certain Indians; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. LOWE. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and printed.

The SPEAKER. It belongs to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. LOWE. I would like to have it go to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think it belongs there; but it is for the House to decide to which committee it shall be referred.

Mr. LOWE. I do not care to insist.

The SPEAKER. It should go to the Committee on Claims, evidently.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PAYMASTER GEORGE PLUNKETT.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1543) to enable the President of the United States to revoke the acceptance of the resignation of Paymaster George Plunkett; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ESTATE OF J. M. MICOW.

Mr. RAPIER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No.

1544) for the relief of the estate of J. M. Micow, of the State of Alabama; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

COLLECTION DISTRICTS, NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. STOWELL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1545) to amend an act entitled "An act relative to collection districts in North Carolina," approved February 25, 1867; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

MINERAL RESOURCES OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. WILBUR, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1546) to amend an act approved March 1, 1873, amendatory of an act entitled "An act to promote the development of the mineral resources of the United States," passed May 10, 1872; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining, and ordered to be printed.

MACHINE FOR MOLDING SHELL.

Mr. MACDOUGALL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1547) for the extension of the patent known as Ward's improved machine for molding shell; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

TOUISSANT MESPLIE.

Mr. SHANKS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1548) for the relief of Touissant Mesplie; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

OFFICERS OF INDIANA VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. PHILLIPS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1549) for the relief of the officers of the Fourth and Fifth Indiana Regiments; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF MISSISSIPPI AND ILLINOIS RIVERS.

Mr. BARRERE, by unanimous consent, presented a memorial of the Fulton County, Illinois, Farmers' Association, asking for immediate appropriations to improve the Mississippi and Illinois Rivers; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BECK. I desire to move a suspension of the rules in order to bring before the House for consideration at this time a concurrent resolution.

Mr. RANDALL. Before that is done I desire consent to present a memorial from certain manufacturers of tacks in Philadelphia, against the renewal of certain patents. I do not ask that the memorial be read, but as it is short I ask that the body of it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. KILLINGER. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I move that the rules be suspended for the purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] has the floor for a motion to suspend the rules.

CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION.

Mr. BECK. I move that the rules be suspended in order to bring before the House for consideration at this time the concurrent resolution which I send to the Clerk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the House of Representatives, on the 21st day of January, 1874, passed a resolution requesting the President to extend, in the name of the United States, a cordial invitation to the governments of other nations to take part in the international exposition to be held at Philadelphia, under the auspices of the Government of the United States, in the year 1876; and whereas it is important to the success of said exposition that the industries of all nations shall be represented, and that every proper inducement should be held out to them, and their inventors, artisans, mechanics, manufacturers, and merchants, to bring and exhibit their goods, wares, and merchandise with as little trouble and expense as possible: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That the President be requested to inform the governments of all nations with which the United States shall have diplomatic intercourse that all articles brought from foreign countries for exhibition at said exposition under the regulations thereof shall be admitted into the United States free of duty, and when such articles have been exhibited, and are withdrawn, in accordance with the rules of the exposition applicable to domestic articles on exhibition, they may be sold or re-exported upon the same terms as like articles produced in the United States may be sold or exported.

Mr. DAWES. I would inquire of the gentleman if he proposes to change existing laws; for if he does, then this resolution is not in the proper form. A concurrent resolution will not have that effect.

Mr. BECK. It is intended to admit all such articles free of duty.

Mr. BURCHARD. Then it should be a joint resolution.

Mr. BECK. I will modify it in that respect, and make it a joint resolution.

Mr. KASSON. Did I understand the resolution rightly to provide that these articles, having been introduced free of duty, may be sold at the close of the exposition, without paying duty?

Mr. BECK. That is the object.

Mr. KASSON. Without limitation of the amount introduced?

Mr. BECK. Nothing can be brought in except such as the commissioners allow.

Mr. KASSON. But these commissioners are not under the control, in that respect, of any law of Congress.

Mr. BECK. I want this resolution brought before the House for consideration, when, of course, it will be subject to any amendments that may be deemed proper.

Mr. DAWES. There is a standing law that all articles brought into the United States for the purpose of exhibition only can be admitted and taken back free of duty.

Mr. KASSON. I think this resolution should be referred to a committee.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. If it is to be referred, I desire to have another bill referred with it.

Mr. BECK. I object to that; I want only to bring this before the House for consideration.

Mr. DAWES. The preamble says "it is important to the success of said exposition." I like that.

Mr. COX. We want to see how Pennsylvania will vote on free trade. That is the point.

Mr. RANDALL. We will show you.

The SPEAKER. The Committee on Elections are entitled to the floor on the West Virginia cases. If this motion to suspend the rules shall prevail, and this resolution is brought before the House for consideration at this time, of course it would be before the House until disposed of, to the exclusion of all other business.

Mr. BECK. I do not desire to take up the time of the House. I will change my motion—to suspend the rules and pass this joint resolution.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the gentleman to put in the word "productions" after "merchandise." Goods, wares, and merchandise do not embrace all the productions of a country.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I would suggest as an amendment, that no person shall exhibit over five hundred tons of any one article. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I ask to have my bill read.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us dispose of this first.

Mr. NEGLEY. Do I understand the gentleman from Kentucky to refuse to allow any amendments?

Mr. COX. I object to debate.

The question was upon seconding the motion to suspend the rules.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BECK and Mr. KASSON were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 54, noes 102.

So the motion to suspend the rules was not seconded.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. POLAND. I move that the rules be suspended, and the following resolution adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire and report to this House the legal relations between the Federal Government and the local government of the District of Columbia, and the extent and character of the mutual obligations in regard to municipal expenses; and further to inquire and report whether some accurately defined basis of expenditure cannot be prescribed and maintained by law.

Mr. RANDALL. That merely proposes an expenditure of more money by the Government for this District.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the resolution will not be adopted.

The question being on seconding the motion to suspend the rules,

Mr. RANDALL called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. POLAND and Mr. RANDALL were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 120, noes not counted.

So the motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The question then recurring on agreeing to the motion to suspend the rules,

Mr. HOLMAN called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 152, nays 71, not voting 63; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albright, Archer, Ashe, Barnum, Bass, Begole, Bell, Berry, Biery, Bromberg, Buckner, Bundy, Burleigh, Burrows, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Cessna, Amos Clark, jr., Clayton, Clinton L. Cobb, Stephen A. Cobb, Coburn, Comingo, Cook, Corwin, Cotton, Crooke, Crounse, Crutchfield, Curtis, Davis, Dawes, Duell, Dunnell, Durham, Eames, Eldredge, Elliott, Farwell, Field, Fort, Freeman, Frye, Garfield, Gooch, Eugene Hale, Robert S. Hale, Harmer, Benjamin W. Harris, Harrison, Havens, John B. Hawley, Joseph R. Hawley, Hays, Gerry W. Hazelton, John W. Hazelton, Hendee, Herndon, E. Rockwood Hoar, George F. Hoar, Hooper, Hoskins, Houghton, Hunter, Hunton, Hurlbut, Hyde, Hynes, Kelley, Kellogg, Kendall, Lamar, Lamport, Lawrence, Leach, Lofland, Lowe, Lowndes, Lynch, Alexander S. McDill, MacDougall, McJunkin, McNulta, Mellish, Merriam, Milliken, Mitchell, Monroe, Moore, Myers, Negley, Niblack, Nunn, O'Neill, Orr, Packard, Page, Isaac C. Parker, Parsons, Pelham, Pendleton, Perry, Phillips, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Poland, Ransier, Rawls, Rice, Richmond, Robbins, Ellis H. Roberts, Ross, Rusk, Henry B. Sayler, John G. Schumaker, Isaac W. Scudder, Sener, Shanks, Sheldon, Sherwood, Sloss, Small, A. Herr Smith, H. Boardman Smith, J. Ambler Smith, William A. Smith, Standeford, Stephens, St. John, Strait, Strawbridge, Swann, Taylor, Thomas, Thornburgh, Townsend, Tyner, Vance, Wallace, Marcus L. Ward, Wheeler, White, Whitehouse, Whiteley, Wilber, George Willard, Charles G. Williams, William Williams, William B. Williams, Jeremiah M. Wilson, and Woodworth—152.

NAYS—Messrs. Atkins, Beck, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Brown, Buffinton, Burchard, Caldwell, Cannon, John B. Clark, jr., Freeman Clarke, Clements, Clymer, Conger, Cox, Creamer, Crittenden, Crossland, Danford, Donnan, Foster, Gunckel, Hamilton, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hereford, Holman, Kasson, Killinger, Knapp, Lawson, Loughridge, Luttrell, Magee, Marshall, Martin, James W. McDill, McLean, Morrison, Neal, O'Brien, Orth, Hosea W. Parker, Phelps, Pierce, Pratt, Rainey, Randall, James C. Robinson, James W. Robinson, Milton Sayler, Sheats, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Smart, John Q. Smith, Southard, Speer, Sprague, Stone, Storm, Waddell, Jasper D. Ward, Wells, Whitthorne, Charles W. Willard, Willie, James Wilson, Wolfe, and Pierce M. B. Young—71.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Albert, Arthur, Averill, Banning, Barber, Barrere, Barry, Bradley, Cain, Cason, Crocker, Darrall, DeWitt, Dobbins, Eden, Giddings, Glover, Hancock, Hatcher, Hathorn, Hersey, Howe, Hubbell, Jewett, Lamison, Lansing, Lewis, Maynard, McCrary, McKee, Mills, Morey, Nesmith, Niles, Packer, Pike, Potter, Purman, Rapier, Ray, Read, William R. Roberts, Sawyer, Scofield, Henry J. Scudder, Sessions, George L. Smith, Snyder, Stanard, Starkweather, Stowell, Sypher, Todd, Tremain, Waldron, Walls, Whitehead, John M. S. Williams, Ephraim K. Wilson, Wood, Woodford, and John D. Young—63.

So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the resolution was adopted.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. ATKINS. I wish to announce that the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. YOUNG, is detained at his room by sickness.

Mr. KELLOGG. My colleague, Mr. STARKWEATHER, is absent on account of sickness in his family.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

REMOVAL OF FLATHEAD AND OTHER INDIANS.

Mr. CLYMER. I move to suspend the rules to enable me to report from the Committee on the Public Lands, and the House to pass, the bill (H. R. No. 1168) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for the removal of the Flathead and other Indians from the Bitter Root Valley, in the Territory of Montana," approved June 5, 1872.

The bill was read. It provides in the first section that the time of sale and payment of pre-empted lands in the Bitter Root Valley, in the Territory of Montana, shall be extended for the period of two years from the expiration of the time allotted in the act entitled "An act to provide for the removal of the Flathead and other Indians from the Bitter Root Valley, in the Territory of Montana," approved June 5, 1872. The second section extends the benefit of the homestead act to all the settlers on the lands who may desire to take advantage of the same.

Mr. CLYMER. I ask the indulgence of the House that I may make a brief statement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. CLYMER. On June 5, 1872, an act of Congress was approved for the removal of the Flathead and other Indians from the Bitter Root Valley, in the Territory of Montana, to the general reservation. The act further provided that those Indians who chose to remain in that valley should have the right first to pre-empt their lands. Subsequently it was provided that not more than fifteen townships of the land should be surveyed, opened, and sold to actual settlers, those on the ground having the right first to pay for and retain the lands then occupied by them, Congress giving them twenty-one months from the date of settlement or passage of the act in which to make payment. It was required that a list of the Indians and the lands that they had selected should be first filed in the proper department. By reason of a disagreement between the Indian agent and the Indian Commissioner, this duty was not performed until about the 4th of December, 1873, thereby leaving the settlers in the valley only about three months in which to make payment as required by law, though the intention of Congress was that they should have twenty-one months for that purpose. It was presumed that the settlement with the Indians could be made in two, three, or four months, leaving about one year and a half in which the settlers could file their proofs and make their payments; but by reason of the disagreement between the agent and the Indian Commissioner, as I have stated, the time of settlement with the Indians was so greatly delayed that now the settlers have only three months left in which to secure the benefits intended to be conferred by the act of June 5, 1872.

The object of this bill is to give them an extension of time in which to make their proofs and payment; and the necessity for it is based on these grounds: first, that the distance from this settlement to the nearest land office is almost two hundred miles, rendering it nearly impossible for the settlers at this season of the year to attend to the matter, even if they had the means to do so; secondly, that by reason of their great distance from civilization, or from any market, there is no sale for their crops, so that, as I am informed, wheat is to-day selling in that region at twenty-five cents a bushel. Their other products bring no greater relative return; and it is evident that if, between this and the 5th day of March next, when the act of 1872 expires by limitation, these settlers are required to make payments for their lands, they must either raise money to do so at such usurious rates as will entirely consume the little means they have, or that, being unable to pay the money, they must lose their rights intended to be secured under the provisions of the original bill. It is a matter of simple justice to these people. Time is pressing, and I pray Congress may, in its good pleasure, promptly pass this bill, in order to relieve them, and thus do an act of simple justice.

Mr. HALE, of New York. Let me ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether the matter has been considered by any committee of this House?

Mr. CLYMER. I intended to state that I was instructed unanimously by the Committee on the Public Lands to report this bill, and move that it be put on its passage.

Mr. HALE, of New York. Is it recommended by the Committee on the Public Lands of this House?

Mr. CLYMER. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the bill which has been read may be passed under a suspension of the rules. Is there a second?

Mr. SHANKS. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania this question: Inasmuch as you open the homesteads to settlers in that valley, I would like to know whether the bill ought not to date back so as to cover the homesteads of all settlers, and not allow the first settlers to come in under the provision of this bill and compel them to pay for lands, while it allows others to come in without paying? Will the gentleman state whether his bill does cover that point?

Mr. CLYMER. The Committee on the Public Lands were of the opinion that it did cover that point.

Mr. SHANKS. Is it the judgment of the committee that it covers the case I have referred to? The Indians have remained in this Bitter Root Valley, and I think it entirely proper to change the provision of the original bill so that all the settlers may have the benefit of homesteads. The intention was that those who took up their claims under the provision of the bill should make payment on the removal of the Indians; but as the Indians are not removed, I think all the settlers ought to have the same privilege; and I believe the statute ought to be clear on that point.

Mr. CLYMER. I ask to have the second section of the bill again read, so there may be no misapprehension on the subject.

The second section of the bill was again read.

Mr. CLYMER. I think that covers the point raised by the gentleman from Indiana.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the bill be passed under a suspension of the rules. Is there a second?

The motion was seconded.

The rules were suspended and the bill was passed, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

BUSTS OF CHIEF JUSTICES TANEY AND CHASE.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the rules be suspended, so as to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill (S. No. 61) providing for busts of the late Chief Justice Roger Brooke Taney and of Salmon Portland Chase, to be placed in the Supreme Court Room of the United States, and put it on its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill providing for busts of the late Chief Justice Roger Brooke Taney and of Salmon Portland Chase, to be placed in the Supreme Court Room of the United States.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Joint Committee of the two Houses of Congress on the Library be, and they are hereby, authorized to procure and place in the room of the Supreme Court of the United States busts of the late Chief Justice Roger Brooke Taney and of the late Salmon Portland Chase.

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of carrying this act into effect the sum of $2,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the gentleman's motion to suspend the rules, so as to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill, to bring it before the House and pass it. Is there a second to that motion?

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Massachusetts. I call for a division on seconding the motion, so that we may see who are in favor of passing this bill before the civil-rights bill is passed.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 117, noes 4.

So the motion was seconded.

Mr. MELLISH. Is an amendment in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

The rules were then suspended; and the Committee of the Whole was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it was passed, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

IMPORTATION OF ARTICLES FOR CENTENNIAL EXHIBITION.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules, and put on its passage a bill (H. R. No. 1550) to admit free of duty articles intended for the international exhibition of 1876.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted &c., That all articles which shall be imported bona fide for exhibition at the international exhibition to be held in the city of Philadelphia, in the year 1876, shall be admitted without the payment of duty or of customs fees or charges, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe: Provided, All such articles as shall be sold in the United States or withdrawn for consumption at any time after said importation shall be subject to the duties, if any, imposed on like articles by the revenue laws in force at the date of the importation.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I am willing to consent to the reference of that bill to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. KASSON. Is this vote on the passage of the bill?

The SPEAKER. It is on seconding the motion for a suspension of the rules.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I consent to a reference of the bill to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman does not introduce the bill for a suspension of the rules and passing it?

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I change my motion, and consent to a reference.

The SPEAKER. That requires unanimous consent.

There was no objection; and the bill, having been twice read, was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

EXPENSES OF UNITED STATES LOANS.

Mr. GARFIELD. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the rules be so suspended that the following section shall be in order as a portion of the text of the bill making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the next fiscal year, namely:

SEC. —. That the acts and parts of acts which authorize permanent, indefinite appropriations to defray the expenses of loans, Treasury notes, or other paper issues of the United States, be, and the same are hereby, repealed; and hereafter the Secretary of the Treasury shall annually submit to the House of Representatives detailed estimates of the appropriations required to defray such expenses.

The motion to suspend the rules was seconded; the rules were suspended, (two-thirds voting therefor,) and the resolution was adopted.

CUSTOM-HOUSE EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. GARFIELD. I also move that the rules be suspended, and the following preamble and resolution be adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it is desirable that all expenditures of the Government shall, as far as practicable, be made in pursuance of annual appropriations made by Congress after a full exhibit of the necessity for the same: Therefore

Resolved, That the Committee on Ways and Means be directed to inquire into the expediency of so amending the laws relating to the expenses of collecting customs duties as to fix the number and rate of compensation of all persons employed in that branch of the service, and to require that said expenses be provided for by appropriations made annually, on estimates submitted to Congress by the Secretary of the Treasury, and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the gentleman also propose to make that the subject of an appropriation bill?

Mr. GARFIELD. I do; whenever we get a report, to know what we will put into it.

Mr. RANDALL. I would suggest an amendment to the gentleman's resolution, by the insertion of the words "and also the internal revenue."

Mr. GARFIELD. That is already appropriated for in the annual bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Not entirely.

The motion to suspend the rules was seconded, the rules were suspended, (two-thirds voting therefor,) and the resolution was adopted.

WELLS'S PATENT FOR HAT-BODIES.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the rules be suspended and that the House order to be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, with one name attached to each paper, the remonstrance of hatters of Philadelphia, and the remonstrance of journeymen hatters of Philadelphia, against the extension of Wells's patent for forming hat-bodies.

Mr. KILLINGER. I call for a count on seconding the motion for suspending the rules.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 94, noes 8.

No further count was demanded.

So the motion was seconded, and the rules were suspended, (two-thirds voting therefor,) and the order was made.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask that the memorials be referred to the Committee on Patents.

There was no objection; and it was so ordered.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I present a similar petition, which I do not ask to have printed, as the order for printing has been made on the motion of the gentleman, [Mr. RANDALL.]

The remonstrances ordered to be printed in the RECORD are as follows:

To the honorable House of Representatives and Senate of the United States:

Remonstrance against the extension of Henry A. Wells's patents of April 25, 1846, reissued 1860, 1862, and 1868, extended by the Commissioner of Patents, and by an act of Congress approved March 4, 1867, extended for a further term of seven years, said Wells's patent being for improvements in machinery for making hat-bodies.

The following facts are respectfully submitted for the consideration of your honorable bodies:

1. The H. A. Wells patents have already been extended by the Commissioner of Patents for seven years, and also by act of Congress for the same period, and a most complete monopoly has been enjoyed for twenty-eight years.

2. The representative of Henry A. Wells, with full knowledge of the value of the patent, after its extension by the Commissioner of Patents, voluntarily sold it to H. A. Burr for $27,500, and has no right to complain of insufficient remuneration, and if she was deceived as to its value, it was by the same monopolists who now seek this extension, and by whom she is again to be deceived.

3. The public paid, during the first term of fourteen years, to the owners of this patent for forming hat-bodies, over and above the expense of making, the sum of $3,383,673, and they have paid about 70 per cent. as much more during the seven years' extension by the Commissioner of Patents, making over $5,000,000 in twenty-one years, and during the last seven years of extension granted by your honorable body they have paid at least $2,800,000, making $7,800,000 as the tax already paid by the public to the owners of this patent, in twenty-eight years.

4. The real applicants for the extension now sought for at the hands of Congress are not the widow and children of H. A. Wells, but the same monopolists to whom every extension has been assigned, and who have already taxed the public as above stated.

5. The last application for extension was privately presented to the Senate at the last moment of its session, and hurriedly acted upon, so as to intentionally prevent the great hat-manufacturing interest from hearing of it.

6. The Supreme Court of the United States have decided that these patents were illegally reissued, and the said owners never have had them corrected, but they have, by deception, induced your honorable bodies to sanction and extend these illegal grants for seven years. The owners of this patent are still not satisfied, but seek in the present application to induce Congress to extend these reissued and illegal grants for another term of seven years.

The remonstrants, in behalf or the hat-making interest, which represents many millions of dollars, respectfully ask that a reasonable opportunity may be afforded to them to establish the above and other important facts before your committee touching these questions.

D. P. CUBBERLEY and others.

To the members of the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

We would humbly remonstrate against the further extension of the patent for forming hat-bodies, which was originally granted to Henry A. Wells, under date of April 25, 1846, and extended by an act of Congress, March 2, 1867, in form of "a bill granting relief to Mrs. Eliza Wells." We beg to remonstrate for the reasons herein set forth:

1. We cannot earn such wages with the hat-bodies prepared by the machines under the Wells patent as we can on work prepared by other machines.

2. Being dependent upon our daily toil for the support of our families, we do not feel that we and our families should be made to contribute to the support of the person seeking a further extension of this patent, as we have reason to believe she is far from want.

3. As the hat business of the country is almost entirely a local trade, we have employment for only about eight months in the year. If this patent is not further extended by you, the price of hats will be so reduced that there will be a large export trade that will give us employment nearly or quite all the year.

Earning our bread by the sweat of our brow, we beg you to listen to our prayer and relieve us from the burden that has long been imposed upon us, by refusing to grant a further extension of said patent.

CYRUS THACHER, and others.

PHILADELPHIA, December 27, 1873.

WASHINGTON AND GEORGETOWN RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. KILLINGER. I move that the rules be suspended and the following resolution adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, instructed to inquire what additional legislation is necessary to secure the comfort and convenience of passengers traveling on the cars of the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company, and that they be authorized to report to the House at any time by bill or otherwise.

The motion for suspending the rules was seconded, the rules were suspended, (two-thirds voting therefor,) and the resolution was adopted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. Would calling the regular order bring up the contested-election case?

The SPEAKER. On Monday there is no regular order, except suspension of the rules.

FORFEITURE OF RAILROAD GRANT.

Mr. PAGE. I move that the rules be suspended and that the Committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 971) to forfeit to the United States certain lands granted to the Placerville and Sacramento Valley Railroad Company to aid in constructing a railroad from the town of Folsom to the town of Placerville, in the State of California, be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that the bill be passed.

The bill was read. It provides that all lands which were granted by Congress in the year 1866 to the Placerville and Sacramento Valley Railroad Company to aid in constructing a railroad from the town of Folsom to the town of Placerville, in the State of California, and which have not been patented by the United States to said company under said grant, which has expired by limitation, may be declared forfeited to the United States, and that these lands shall hereafter be disposed of as other public lands of the United States.

Mr. HEREFORD. The Committee on the Public Lands desire to be permitted to report this bill, and that it shall be passed under a suspension of the rules. I ask the indulgence of the House for one moment while I state very briefly the facts.

In July, 1866, Congress passed an act donating to the Placerville and Sacramento Valley Railroad Company certain lands to aid in the construction of that road. By the terms of the act the road was to be commenced in one year from the date of the approval of the act by the President, and was to be completed by July 4, 1869. These were part of the provisions of the act making the grant, and if they were not complied with the lands were to revert. Accompanying the report of the committee is a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, in which he says that none of the provisions of the original grant have been complied with; and it is deemed desirable that these lands should now be forfeited to the United States, so that they can be entered like other public lands of the United States.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to ask a question of the gentleman from West Virginia who has reported this bill.

Mr. PAGE. I would like to make a few remarks in explanation of the bill.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I object to debate.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Well, I think we ought not to pass a bill forfeiting men's rights without some discussion. I do not know a word about this case, but I do not think the principle a right one.

Mr. HOLMAN. O, the bill is all right.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I object to debate.

Mr. PAGE. I do not propose to debate. I only ask five minutes to explain what the bill is.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. Well, sir, I withdraw the objection.

Mr. PAGE. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HEREFORD] who reported the bill has stated exactly the status of the bill. In 1866 the Congress of the United States granted to the Placerville and Sacramento Valley Railroad Company certain lands to aid in constructing a railroad from the town of Folsom to the town of Placerville. The company were to receive certain sections of land provided they completed the road by the 4th of July, 1869. There has not been any of that railroad built since the passage of the bill. The lands are withdrawn from public entry, and the people now demand that lands which have been forfeited over five years to the Government of the United States shall be received back by the Government, that they may be opened up to homestead and pre-emption entry. I do not believe there is a gentleman in this House who desires to place himself in opposition to the Government of the United States receiving back what belongs to it.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I certainly do not desire to put myself on record in that way, but I thought it dangerous, without debate, to pass a measure of this sort. I have since been informed that the bill has received the unanimous indorsement of the Committee on the Public Lands, and that being the case, I have so much faith in that committee that I shall break my custom and waive all objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to make one inquiry of the gentleman from West Virginia. For the first time the House seems to be informed that, in the judgment of the Committee on the Public Lands, it is necessary when a forfeiture has occurred in a case of this kind that forfeiture should be declared by act of Congress. I wish to ask the gentleman from West Virginia if that is the interpretation given to these grants, and, if so, whether his committee does not design reporting a general bill, declaring all grants heretofore made, in relation to which the conditions have not been fulfilled, forfeited?

Mr. HEREFORD. I can only say——

Mr. PAGE. I object to further debate.

Mr. COX. I would like to ask one question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California has objected to debate.

Mr. COX. Well; I will not vote for a bill which may have a negative pregnant in it. Have any of these lands been patented to the company?

Mr. HEREFORD. Not one single acre. The committee had before them a letter from the Commissioner of the Land-Office, stating that no one single provision of the bill granting the lands had been complied with, and that not one mile of the road had been built.

Mr. COX. Well, then, the bill is all right.

The question was taken on seconding the motion to suspend the rules, and (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

SUPERVISOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution, which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Ways and Means be directed to inquire whether any necessity exists for the continuation of the office of supervisor of internal revenue, and whether the duties of said office cannot be performed by the collectors of internal revenue in the various collection districts.

THE SANDERSON HOUSE.

Mr. BUNDY. I move that the rules be suspended for the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be requested to report to this House why it is that the Sanderson House, standing near the southeast corner of the Capitol, is permitted to remain blooming and lone, while all the other buildings and structures heretofore standing on the land purchased by the Government for enlarging the public grounds have been removed. "Why is this thus?"

[Laughter.]

The question was put on seconding the motion to suspend the rules; and on a division there were—ayes 41, noes not counted.

So the motion to suspend the rules was not seconded.

SHAREHOLDERS IN NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. BUCKNER. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the following resolution be adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to inform this House what members of the present Congress, if any, at the date of the last report made by the president or cashier of national banking associations, in pursuance of the provisions of the act establishing said banking associations, approved June 3, 1864, were shareholders in said national banking associations, the number of shares held by each, the residence of said shareholders, and the place where the business of said banking associations, respectively, is transacted.

The question was put on seconding the motion to suspend the rules, and no quorum voted.

Mr. SPEER. The officer called on has no means of furnishing this information.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BUCKNER and Mr. EAMES were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 78, noes 77.

So there was a second.

The question recurred on the motion to suspend the rules, and pass the resolution.

Mr. BUCKNER. On that question, I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; fifty members voting therefor.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 146, nays 98, not voting 43; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Barber, Barrere, Bass, Beck, Begole, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Bundy, Burchard, Burleigh, Benjamin F. Butler, Cain, Caldwell, Cannon, John B. Clark, jr., Clements, Clymer, Stephen A. Cobb, Coburn, Comingo, Cotton, Cox, Crittenden, Crossland, Curtis, Darrall, Davis, Durham, Eldredge, Field, Fort, Freeman, Giddings, Hancock, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hatcher, Havens, John B. Hawley, Hays, Hendee, Hereford, Herndon, Holman, Hunter, Hunton, Hurlbut, Hyde, Hynes, Kasson, Kendall, Knapp, Lamison, Lawson, Leach, Lewis, Luttrell, Lynch, Magee, Marshall, Martin, McCrary, Alexander S. McDill, McLean, McNulta, Mellish, Merriam, Milliken, Mills, Monroe, Moore, Morrison, Neal, Nesmith, Niblack, O'Brien, Orr, Orth, Hosea W. Parker, Isaac C. Parker, Pratt, Randall, Rawls, Ray, Read, Richmond, Robbins, James C. Robinson, James W. Robinson, Ross, Rusk, Henry B. Sayler, Milton Sayler, John G. Schumaker, Scofield, Sener, Shanks, Sheats, Sheldon, Sherwood, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Sloss, Small, H. Boardman Smith, J. Ambler Smith, John Q. Smith, Southard, Sprague, Standeford, Stone, Storm, Strait, Sypher, Taylor, Thornburgh, Todd, Tyner, Vance, Jasper D. Ward, Marcus L. Ward, White, Whitehead, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Charles W. Willard, Charles G. Williams, Willie, Ephraim K. Wilson, James Wilson, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wolfe, Wood, Woodworth, and Pierce M. B. Young—147.

NAYS—Messrs. Albert, Barnum, Biery, Bradley, Buffinton, Roderick R. Butler, Cessna, Amos Clark, jr., Freeman Clarke, Clayton, Conger, Cook, Corwin, Creamer, Crooke, Crounse, Crutchfield, Dawes, Dobbins, Donnan, Duell, Dunnell, Eames, Elliott, Farwell, Foster, Frye, Garfield, Gooch, Gunckel, Eugene Hale, Robert S. Hale, Hamilton, Harmer, Benjamin W. Harris, Harrison, Joseph R. Hawley, Gerry W. Hazelton, John W. Hazelton, E. Rockwood Hoar, George F. Hoar, Hooper, Houghton, Hubbell, Kelley, Kellogg, Killinger, Lamport, Lansing, Lofland, Loughridge, Lowndes, Maynard, James W. McDill, MacDougall, McJunkin, Morey, Myers, Negley, O'Neill, Packard, Page, Parsons, Pelham, Pendleton, Perry, Phelps, Pierce, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Poland, Purman, Rainey, Ransier, Rice, Ellis H. Roberts, Sawyer, Isaac W. Scudder, Sessions, Smart, A. Herr Smith, William A. Smith, Speer, St. John, Strawbridge, Swann, Thomas, Townsend, Waddell, Waldron, Wallace, Wheeler, Whiteley, Wilber, George Willard, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, and William B. Williams—98.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Albright, Averill, Barry, Burrows, Cason, Clinton L. Cobb, Crocker, Danford, DeWitt, Eden, Glover, Hathorn, Hersey, Hoskins, Howe, Jewett, Lamar, Lawrence, Lowe, McKee, Mitchell, Niles, Nunn, Packer, Phillips, Pike, Potter, Rapier, William R. Roberts, Henry J. Scudder, George L. Smith, Snyder, Stanard, Starkweather, Stephens, Stowell, Tremain, Walls, Wells, Woodford, and John D. Young—41.

So (two-thirds not voting in the affirmative) the rules were not suspended.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. SPEER said, when his name was called: Although I hold no national-bank stock, I vote "no."

Mr. POLAND. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. I am a stockholder in a national bank and president and director of one. Is it proper that I should vote on this resolution?

The SPEAKER. The Chair could not rule that the gentleman had not that right.

Mr. POLAND. Then I vote "no." [Laughter.]

Mr. MAYNARD. Perhaps I ought to say that I am neither a stockholder, nor president, director, or other officer of a national bank, and I vote "no."

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. MAYNARD said: Allow me to suggest to the mover of this resolution that its phraseology would include Senators as well as members of the House. It would be well, by general consent, to limit it in its terms to members of the House.

Mr. STORM. I object.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed, without amendments, bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 1231) to abolish the office of deputy commissioner of internal revenue; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1382) authorizing coinage to be executed at the mints of the United States for foreign countries.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 798) to establish certain post-routes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1221) to confirm certain land titles in the State of Missouri.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I desire to call up the West Virginia election cases.

Mr. KELLOGG. I desire to move to suspend the rules and adopt the following resolution:

Resolved, That every member of this House is hereby ordered to send to the Speaker's table a true and perfect inventory of all real and personal estate by him owned at the date of the passage of this resolution, with a detailed statement of the time and manner in which he acquired the same.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Would it be in order to move to amend that resolution?

The SPEAKER. It is not before the House unless the gentleman from New York [Mr. SMITH] yields the floor for the purpose.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I do not yield for that purpose; I desire to call up the West Virginia election cases.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot maintain those cases before the House except by a suspension of the rules.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. Then I make that motion.

The motion to suspend the rules was seconded, and (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) it was adopted.

FABBRI & CHAUNCEY.

Mr. COX, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1551) for the relief of Fabbri & Chauncey, of New York City; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

WEST VIRGINIA ELECTION CASES.

The House, under a suspension of the rules, then proceeded to the consideration of the report of the Committee on Elections upon the contested-election cases from West Virginia.

Mr. CROSSLAND. Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate for me to be compelled to speak on the question under consideration in the waning hours of this "devil's day," as congressional Mondays have been, not inappropriately, styled. I am embarrassed by the consciousness that I have come to glean in a field where the reapers who have gone before me have left little of anything valuable or useful to be gathered. The arguments have been so exhaustive, and in my judgment so conclusive, as to leave me a burnt district of discussion to travel over. Having patiently and carefully investigated the question, as a member of the Committee on Elections, I desire to briefly present to the House the reasons that impelled me to concur in the majority report, and to support the resolutions they offer.

It seems to me, sir, that when the question is divested of the technicalities and learned subtleties that have been thrown around it, and tested in the light of common sense and by the ordinary rules of interpretation, the solution is plain and easy. The question presented is to me anomalous. In 1872 two elections for Representatives to Congress were held in the State of West Virginia: one in the month of August, at which Mr. Davis and Mr. Hagans received a majority of the votes cast in the first and second districts, and they are here claiming that they were then legally elected to represent their respective districts, and asserting their right to seats on this floor. Another election was held on the fourth Thursday in October following, at which Mr. Wilson and Mr. Martin received a majority of the votes cast in said districts, and they are here claiming that they were legally elected on that day, and are entitled to seats. And the only question for the House to determine is, which was the legally appointed day for the congressional election to occur; either the election in August was legal and that in October illegal, or vice versa.

The fourth section of the first article of the Constitution of the United States directs as follows:

> That the times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof.

What is meant by the "time" required to be prescribed? Evidently that a day shall be fixed upon and set apart for that election. Why is a certain fixed day required to be prescribed? That all the people shall have notice there is to be but one day fixed, and that must be fixed so that no doubt will be left as to the time when the people shall assemble and elect a man to fill this important office.

The Legislature of the State is the only body in the State that is authorized by the Constitution to prescribe the times and places for holding congressional elections, and the Legislature of each State is commanded to discharge this duty. Now let us see if the Legislature of West Virginia has complied with this imperative requirement of the Constitution. We find that in 1869 they enacted the following statute:

> SECTION 1. The general elections for State, district, county, and township officers and members of the Legislature shall be held on the fourth Thursday of October.
>
> SEC. 2. At the said elections, in every year, there shall be elected delegates to the Legislature and one senator for every senatorial district. And in the year 1870, and every second year thereafter, a governor, secretary of state, treasurer, auditor, and attorney-general of the State, a prosecuting attorney, surveyor of lands, recorder, and the number of assessors prescribed by law, and a Representative in the Congress of the United States, for the term beginning on the 4th day of March next after the election, for every congressional district.

The first section fixes or prescribes a time, a day, the fourth Thursday in October; and the second section provides that at said election, i. e. the election to be held on the fourth Thursday in October, 1870, and every second year thereafter, the election for Representatives in Congress shall be held. Thus the Legislature with the Constitution of the United States before it, and each member sworn to support that Constitution, complied with the plain requirement and prescribed a day certain, leaving no room for a doubt about it. The people understood this law, and in 1870, on the fourth Thursday in October, they assembled at their voting places and elected Messrs. Hereford, McGrew, and one of the contestants, Mr. John J. Davis, to represent them in the Forty-Second Congress.

But, sir, for some reason this plain requirement of the act of the Legislature was departed from, and an election for Congress was held in August, 1872; and, as before said, two gentlemen, Messrs. Davis and Hagans, claim seats here under that election. No one denies that the Legislature had the exclusive power to prescribe the time for the congressional election to be held; but those who seek to maintain the August election argue that the Legislature did not fix a day, but an event or occasion, and that a constitutional convention could alter or change this event or occasion, and that the constitutional convention in the schedule did in fact alter or change the event or occasion from October to August. This argument reminds me of Tony Lumpkin's riddle, "What is that that goes round the house and round the house and never touches the house?" I believe Tony never explained. Here is an argument that goes round the question and round the question but never touches it. And I believe I can aptly illustrate the force of the argument by another quotation from Tony, in his description of the route he led his mother the night she ran away with her niece and the jewels: "First, I took them down Feather-bed Lane, where they stuck fast in the mud; then I rattled them crack over the stones on Up and Down Hill; I then introduced them to the gibbet in Crack-skull Common, and from that by a circumbendibus I fairly landed them in the horse-pond at the bottom of the garden." Gentlemen admit that the Legislature only could prescribe the time. The enactment that I have read shows that the Legislature did fix a day, but gentlemen argue an occasion was fixed, and by this circumbendibus attempt to establish the validity of the August election. Surely the Constitution never intended that a legally prescribed day for this important election should be altered in this roundabout way.

Mr. Speaker, does the House understand that this August congressional election, that gentlemen contend was fixed by the constitutional convention, was held on the same day that that constitution was submitted to the people of West Virginia for ratification or rejection? It was not adopted until it was ratified by the votes of the people on that day. And can it be claimed that a provision of that constitution or schedule prescribed a time for holding a congressional election as required by the Constitution of the United States? What does "prescribed" mean? Why, nothing else than to fix a day before, so that the people could have notice before of the day of the election. Suppose the constitution had been rejected, what would have become of the congressional election which we are told was authorized by that constitution? Would not "the bottom have fallen out of it?" And would these gentlemen have appeared here to claim seats under it?

It has been argued here that although the fourth Thursday in October was the day legally prescribed, that because the votes polled on that day were not as numerous as at the August election, that the gentlemen elected in October ought to be denied their seats, and all hands sent back to West Virginia for a new election. It is true that the vote for Congress in the first district was larger at the August than at the October election, but in the second district the vote at the October election was more than double the number cast at the August election, and the argument loses its force. But one of the days is the legal time and day for the election. And the candidates voted for and elected on that day are entitled to seats here, whether the votes cast were numerous or few. If the election is held on a day prescribed by law, and five thousand votes are given and ten thousand voters refrain from voting, the election is nevertheless valid.

It is certainly a new doctrine in this country that if a large number of citizens entitled to vote stay at home and acquiesce in the choice made by those who do go out and vote, that this will invalidate an election. There is no law compelling citizens to vote, and no penalty for non-voting.

I have been a little astonished to hear members on the other side talk so feelingly in favor of State rights, the sovereignty of the States, &c.—that the rights of the States will be forever destroyed if we fail to establish the validity of the election that they claim was held under authority of a constitutional convention. The doctrine of "State rights" is my political idol; but does not the State exercise this "right" by the action of its Legislature; and are not the rights which are properly in the care of the Legislature as safe as they would be if exercised by a convention? But no "State-rights" man ever claimed that the States could exercise "rights" which were expressly delegated to the General Government. Let us maintain and enjoy the reserved rights of the States, and exercise the powers not delegated, and the "rights" will be safe.

This right to prescribe the time for a congressional election had been given to the Federal Government and by it conferred on the Legislatures of the States; and a convention can neither prescribe a time nor repeal nor alter a time prescribed by the Legislature. And gentlemen who have perhaps not investigated the question closely have heard some of the arguments which have come from the gentlemen on the other side about what that new constitution of West Virginia, and especially what the schedule, said on the subject of congressional elections; and, if so, you will be astonished when I tell you that the constitutional convention of West Virginia refrained from saying one word or writing one line of direction in respect to the congressional election. They understood their duty better. They knew they had no power. They knew the power had been expressly conferred upon the Legislature, and that the convention had no authority or power to say a word on the subject.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. If the Committee on Elections had not been so very much divided in regard to this case, I might not perhaps have given myself a great deal of trouble to have examined into its merits. But finding such a diversity of opinion among the members of that committee, I felt that it was my duty to look into this question with some care for the purpose of guiding myself with regard to the vote that I am called upon to cast with reference to this matter. Now, it is proposed by the majority of the committee to seat the gentlemen who were voted for and received a majority of the votes cast on the fourth Thursday of October, and as a matter of course, before these gentlemen can be seated, it will be necessary to show that provision had been made by law for an election on that day. If there was no provision of law by virtue of which an election could be held on that day in October, then it necessarily follows that these gentlemen cannot be seated, and the majority report of this committee cannot be sustained. Before I had looked into this question particularly I had the impression in my mind, from what I had heard about the House, that that was the legal day for the election. But upon looking into the question I have been compelled to change my opinion upon that subject. Now, I think it is susceptible of absolute demonstration that there was no law under which an election for members of Congress could be held on that day in October. Prior to the adoption of the new constitution there were two provisions of the code on that subject. They have been repeated here so often that I am almost ashamed to allude to them again. But I beg the attention of the House now to this point.

The first section of the law of 1869 provides that—

The general elections for State, district, county, and township officers, and members of the Legislature, shall be held on the fourth Thursday of October.

Then the second section provides that at the said elections members of Congress shall be elected. Now, thus stood the law prior to the adoption of the new constitution. When the new constitution went into effect, which was on the 22d day of August, 1872, it abrogated every law that was not in harmony with its provisions. That the House may see that there is no question about that, I ask gentlemen to look at the constitution itself, and they will find the provision there that all laws not inconsistent with this constitution are continued in force, and all laws that are not in harmony with the provisions of the constitution are abrogated.

Now, the constitution provided that, after its enactment, the general elections should be held at a different time from the fourth Thursday in October; and this law authorizing the election to be held on the fourth Thursday of October was inconsistent with this constitution, and therefore was abrogated by the constitution.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. Will the gentleman from Indiana allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I believe I will. I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. Did the new constitution abrogate that part of section 1 which required district officers to be elected on the fourth Thursday of October? The new constitution does not allude to district officers.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I have read the report of the chairman of the Committee on Elections two or three times, with some care and some solicitude, for the purpose of arriving at the truth with regard to this case. And I confess it seems to me that he refines a little too much upon this subject of district officers. But it would take up a great deal more time than I propose to occupy in this discussion to go into an investigation of that question.

Now, sir, the point I make, and I simply wish to state it, is this: The first section provides that the general election shall be held on the fourth Thursday in October; the second section provides that the congressional election shall be held on that same day, at the time of the general election. But then the new constitution provides a different day. Now, when the new constitution provides a different day, then the first section is inconsistent with the new constitution, and is entirely abrogated or repealed, and consequently the fourth Thursday of October was not the day on which a legal election could be held. Now, it seems to me, if that is so, a simple statement of it is enough, without an argument, and consequently the majority report of the committee cannot be sustained.

Now, the next question is this: Can these gentlemen, who are claiming seats here by virtue of the election of the 22d of August, be seated by the House? Let us look at it for a moment. It has been said, and said correctly, that the Constitution of the United States requires that the time for holding the congressional elections shall be fixed by the Legislature; and it has been argued over and over again that the Legislature did not fix the 22d of August as the time, and that therefore no election could properly be held on that day. Now, let us see if that is a fact. I said a moment ago that the general election was to be held originally on the fourth Thursday of October, and the second section provided that at that general election the congressional election should take place. In other words, that whenever a general election was held in the State of West Virginia for State officers, that should be the time for holding the election for members of Congress.

Mr. LAWRENCE. It was the event.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. You may call it an event, occasion, time, what you will. The Legislature of the State of West Virginia simply say in this law that when a general election is held in the State of West Virginia, then you shall elect members of Congress. I do not care whether you call it an event, time, occasion, or what not, that is the whole point. As the law stood prior to the adoption of the new constitution, that day was to be the fourth Thursday in October, and the Legislature had said that when that general election was held the congressional election should take place. Does the Constitution of the United States provide that the Legislature shall fix the time of holding a general election? No, sir; that is a matter that rests with the people of the State; and when they get together in their delegate capacity to make a new constitution, they have a right, either by the terms of that constitution or by the schedule submitting it to the people, to fix the time of the general election.

The people, acting through their delegates, did fix a time for holding the general election; but the Legislature had formerly said that the time for holding the election for members of Congress should be when the general election was held. Therefore the Legislature did fix the time. They fixed whatever time was the time of the general election, and no matter by what process the people fixed the time of the general election, this act of the Legislature was continued in force by the very terms of the new constitution. The people, through their delegates, fixed the time for holding the general election; and it was necessary for them to do so. Here were the people of the State of West Virginia about to adopt a new constitution; they were fixing up the machinery of their government; they were making an organic law, to which all the laws of the State were to conform.

Now that constitution, by its terms, was to take effect on the morning of the 22d day of August, if adopted. If they had not provided for electing all the officers of the State, if they had not made provision for a general election on that day, what would they have had? They would have had the frame of a government, but none of the machinery necessary to carry it into operation; they would have had a government without officers; and therefore it was necessary that the delegates who framed that constitution should submit a proposition to the people to elect officers at the same time that they voted on the constitution, to the end that the government might be put in harmonious operation at once. They, therefore, properly declared that they would elect on that same day all the State officers.

"O, but," gentlemen say, "the term 'general election' is not used here." Well, I admit it is not; nor is it necessary that it should be. Provision was made for electing all their officers; and that is a general election, whether designated by that phrase or not.

Mr. MELLISH. I would ask the gentleman this question: At what exact point of time did the new constitution go into effect?

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. On the morning of the 22d of August.

Mr. MELLISH. Before or after the polls closed?

Mr. LAWRENCE. The new constitution of West Virginia, when ratified by the vote of the people on the fourth Thursday of August, became operative and in force from the first moment of that day, just as a bill passed by Congress takes effect from the first moment of the day of its approval by the President. There are some exceptions to this rule, as has been decided by the Supreme Court at its present term, but they are not applicable to the question now in controversy.

The old constitution did not, in terms, attempt to interfere with this principle of law which disregards fractions of days.

So far as the old constitution attempted to prohibit a retrospective effect for the new one, it was ultra vires, upon the principle stated on page 263, note 259 to article 5 of the amendments to the Constitution, found in Paschal's Annotated Constitution, that one legislative body cannot bind a later one having equal power.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. It was expressely provided that it should go into effect on that day, if adopted.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. That is not the point I wished to make. We cannot split hairs on questions of this kind. We have to look at the question, not as special pleaders, but we have to look at the whole scope of the case. The people of West Virginia were about to put into operation a new government, and they had to have officers of that government, and they had a right to determine who should be those officers. They fixed the time to hold the election of those officers, and when they had fixed the time for that general election then the act of the Legislature attached to it and fixed the time when members of Congress should be elected. That is the whole point in the question before us. Therefore, when gentlemen say that the Legislature is required to fix the time, it is perfectly palpable to my mind that they did fix the time for members of Congress to be elected. But the Legislature was not bound to fix the time when this general election should be held, The people through their delegates fixed the time for the general election; the Legislature fixed that as the time for the election of members of Congress. I believe that is all I care to say upon this subject now.

Mr. SPEER. I do not desire to speak this evening; but the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. WILSON] does, and therefore I yield to him.

WEST VIRGINIA CONTESTED ELECTIONS.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, if the questions growing out of this West Virginia controversy were those of ordinary legislation I would not presume to say one word to a wearied House upon such a stale and threadbare subject. But these cases involve the settlement of most valued and valuable rights on the part of claimants to seats in this House, as well as the great fundamental right of a whole people to be represented on this floor by men selected according to the provisions of law; and those rights being submitted to our decision as judges, it is our solemn duty patiently to examine and impartially to decide the questions involved. For this reason, and also because I am compelled to differ from the majority of those on this side of the House, I beg permission briefly to state the grounds of my conviction.

The first two sections of chapter 3 of the code of West Virginia are in these words:

1. The general election of State, district, county, and township officers, and members of the Legislature, shall be held on the fourth Thursday of October.

2. At the said elections in every year there shall be elected delegates to the Legislature, and one senator for every senatorial district. And in the year 1870, and every second year thereafter, a governor, secretary of state, treasurer, auditor, and attorney-general for the State; a prosecuting attorney, surveyor of lands, recorder, and the number of assessors prescribed by law, and a Representative to the Congress of the United States, for the term beginning on the 4th day of March next after the election, for every congressional district; and in the year 1870, and every fourth year thereafter, a judge of the supreme court of appeals for the State, and a clerk of the circuit court, and a sheriff for every county; and in the year 1874, and every sixth year thereafter, a judge for every circuit.

Article 4, section 7, of the new constitution of West Virginia, ratified by popular vote on the 22d August, 1872, is in these words:

The general elections of State and county officers, and members of the Legislature, shall be held on the second Tuesday of October, until otherwise provided by law.

The constitutional convention adopted a schedule, of which sections 3 and 7 are as follows:

SEC. 3. The officers authorized by existing laws to conduct general elections shall cause elections to be held at the several places for voting established by law in each county, on the fourth Thursday of August, 1872, at which elections the votes of all persons qualified to vote under the existing constitution, and offering to vote, shall be taken upon the question of ratifying or rejecting this constitution and schedule.

* * * * * * * *

SEC. 7. On the same day, and under the superintendence of the officers who shall conduct the election for determining the ratification or rejection of the constitution and schedule, elections shall be held at the several places of voting in each county for senators and members of the house of delegates, and all officers, executive, judicial, county, or district, required by this constitution to be elected by the people.

The section of the old constitution on elections is identical with the first section of the code, the words "district" and "township" omitted.

Every member of this House who cares to know must be now fully informed as to all the facts, as well as legal and constitutional provisions, out of which this controversy springs. I shall, therefore, proceed at once to the argument.

Our starting-point is, of course, that provision of the Federal Constitution which declares that—

The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof.

It will be thus seen that the question is not the power of a State Legislature or convention over a State election, but what is or what is not a fulfillment of a mandate of the Federal Constitution by a State Legislature with respect to the election of members of Congress.

In order to answer this question, it is absolutely necessary to know the meaning of the terms used. What is it "to prescribe?" We are told its primitive meaning, from its composition in the original language, of "writing beforehand" is too narrow. Take, then, its derivative and secondary meaning, as applied by lexicographers peculiarly to law-makers, of "laying down authoritatively for direction," or "giving as a rule of action." These definitions or any others which have ever been given to the word necessarily imply that to prescribe the time for an election is to fix it by some prospective legislation, not conditionally or contingently, but absolutely and with certainty. Otherwise, how can it be a "regulation" (as this clause in the Constitution just quoted in part calls it) for the government of the citizens? A rule of action adopted subsequently to the act to be controlled by it is very like an absurdity in terms.

Now, sir, it is urged that the convention which met in West Virginia in 1872 prescribed the 22d of August of that year as the day of general election, and that thereby the election of Congressmen was attracted to that day, and that the claimants then having received majorities of votes were duly elected. This we deny. We contend that the convention did not even intend to prescribe the 22d of August as the day of a general election in the sense in which that phrase is used in the code, and even if they did they have utterly failed in their intention.

The question is not how many officials were on that day to be elected, but with what object and for what purpose an election is directed by the convention to be held on that day, and in what sense the word "election" is used by the convention in giving that direction. The code speaks of a general election that is to take place every year for such officers as the constitution and laws required to be elected by the whole people of the State; but although in 1869 a very meager list was to be elected, while in 1870 the ballots of the electors were darkened with a motley crowd of candidates, one was as much a general election as the other. Why? Because each was the regular annual day when the officers required by the constitution and laws to be voted for should be chosen by the people, without regard to the number to be elected.

The idea of a general election day is of a periodical return, when the demand of the laws for new officers is to be supplied. Such is the sense in which the words are used in the code, beyond all question. Such is the sense in which the words are used in the old and new constitutions of West Virginia. And I have never seen any constitution or law in which the words were used in a different meaning.

But the convention of 1872, carefully avoiding the use of the phrase with reference to the 22d of August, manifestly employ the word "election" in their schedule in a very different sense. They first use it with reference to the election to be held on that day upon the constitution and schedule, which every one will concede to have been purely special, although to be conducted by the officers whose duty it was to hold general elections under the old constitution. On the same day, and under the same officers, the electors were directed by the schedule to vote for all officers required by the new constitution to be elected by the people.

The object here, beyond all dispute, was special—to insure, if that instrument should be adopted, that the officers necessary to put it into operation should be at the same time chosen. But it was not only special in object, but also in the important circumstance of time. Probably no other election will ever again be held throughout that State on the anniversary of that same day. It was not only special in object and time, but also in manner. It was held concurrently with an election upon the new constitution, out of which it grew and upon which it literally hung. Beyond all reasonable doubt, such another election will never again occur in that State.

Not only in object, time, and manner, but also with respect to the mode of its authorization, was this election exceptional and special. It was literally a law unto itself. The convention, without assuming to make it an absolute and unconditional election, left it to the people on that day voting to determine whether the candidates receiving majorities of votes should be the substances or the shadows of officers. Not only in object, time, manner, and law was this election special, but also with respect to its results. In one event, it should be fruitless; in another, it would result in a larger tenure of office than under any other election on the future general election day by that constitution provided. Thus in every possible feature of a general election day was this 22d of August deficient, except that of the large number of candidates, which we have seen is not, in the meaning of the code, a necessary characteristic.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, if the convention intended that the 22d of August should be in its technical sense a day of general election, with a view to the effect it would have to draw to it the congressional election, as contended for, it is inconceivable why they did not so designate it. It was the height of bungling absurdity not only to avoid so calling it, but to actually contrast it with a general election day, by specially directing that the machinery of such a general election should be set in motion on that occasion. If it was a general election, that machinery was, as a matter of course, its legitimate concomitant. And the convention not only contrasts the 22d of August with a general election, but by applying that phrase specifically in the body of the constitution to a periodical, annual election, such in all respects as that mentioned in the code, they plainly evidenced that they fully had in mind the broad difference between the special election for officers, once for all ordered by them on the 22d of August, and the general election, which the new constitution, if adopted, would require to be held on the second Tuesday of every October till otherwise provided.

But if the convention meant to make the 22d of August a day of general election, and thus to attract to it the election of Representatives in Congress, we contend they have utterly failed in their intention; because the provision in the code and the act of the convention, taken together, would not be a compliance with the mandate of the Federal Constitution, that the legislative power shall prescribe the time for such election. We deny that the convention of 1872 ordained any election of officers on the 22d of August, by virtue of its own authority. And we deny that any authority or power ordered any election of officers at all on that day, till it was past and become a part of recorded time.

That convention did prescribe the 22d of August for an election upon the new constitution; and that was the only election which they proposed should be absolutely and unconditionally conclusive. That body did, it is true, in a schedule appended to the constitution, direct that, upon the same day when that instrument should be voted upon, the electors should vote for certain officers described in said schedule; but whether this voting should be an election or not, indisputably depended not upon the fiat of the convention, but upon the vote of the people adopting or rejecting that instrument. If the majority should vote yea, it should be an election of officers; if nay, it should be little better than child's play.

But in the nature of things it could not be determined whether an election at all had been held, except upon the constitution itself, till every vote was cast and the polls were closed on that day; and it could not be in any sense known whether an election of officers had been held, till the votes upon the constitution had been counted, and the aggregate for and against it had been ascertained; and this all-important fact could not be officially known till the governor had issued his proclamation, declaring the constitution adopted or rejected. Thus, for days after the 22d of August, it could not be known whether an election, in law or in fact, had occurred or not. And when the constitution was proclaimed, the election of officers on that day could only be made legal and effective by causing the vote of the people to relate back and embrace the whole of the 22d of August.

A legal fiction alone—for such is the doctrine of relation—could avail to make the voting of the people on that day an election under a constitution which has not yet been adopted. Surely the day of an election so prescribed, not by any positive and absolute previous legislation or appointment, but by the retroactive force of a popular vote, in its very nature doubtful and contingent, cannot be a fulfillment of the requirement of the Federal Constitution, that the time of the election of Representatives shall be prescribed—beforehand fixed—by the Legislature.

In this case the time was not really fixed till after the election was over. The voters did not and could not know when they were voting whether they were surely voting for members of Congress or not. They did not and could not know, after they had voted, whether they had really voted for such officials or not. Thousands of them, whilst casting ballots professing to be for a Representative in Congress, on the same paper voted that the whole thing should be a nullity. The candidate himself did not know, when he was soliciting votes, whether even thousands of majority would elect him. It might all be a waste of labor, wherein the man who was most triumphantly elected might still be most disastrously defeated. All, on such a day, was doubt, uncertainty, contingency, and confusion.

Now, all these anomalous proceedings may have been allowable as to West Virginia officials, for the people of that State are sovereign over all matters of internal legislation, except so far as restrained by the Federal Constitution. The convention and people of West Virginia may have been potent enough to make her citizens live under two distinct constitutions during the same day, or, rather, to place them in the odd predicament of not knowing to what constitution they were for the time being subject; and they may have been competent to elect their own State officers by the aid of legal fictions, and at an election which was only such by virtue of the vote then and there polled; but surely it requires the widest latitude of construction to transform such proceedings into a compliance with the constitutional command that the Legislature shall prescribe, shall fix beforehand, the time for a congressional election. If such an election can be made to depend on such a contingency it could have been made to depend upon any number or kind of contingencies, and a State Legislature could have at any time nullified this important power and duty by the very mode of its execution.

We are therefore forced to conclude that the 22d day of August was not, and was not intended to be, fixed as the day for the election of members of Congress, and that none were on that day legally elected.

But the artificial doctrines of relation and of the non-recognition of fractions of a day have been invoked to sustain a tottering cause. The very attempt to impress these legal fictions into use is a concession that no previous actual legislation fixed the 22d of August as the day of a congressional election at all, and that its supporters must have the aid of maxims which will help them to consider certain things as done before they were done, and as true in law when they were not true in fact. Surely it requires no argument to show that these maxims are grossly misapplied.

The simple inquiry is, was the 22d of August, in a constitutional sense, prescribed as the day of election for members of Congress? To answer that the time was prescribed at the close of the polls on that day, and made to relate back to the beginning, or that it was prescribed during the latter part of the day and must be considered as done at the beginning, because the law knows no fraction of a day, is to trifle with the subject, and, moreover, to ignore the clear exception to their own maxim, that when the question is as to which of two events actually occurred first, the law not only takes cognizance of fractions, but of the minutest subdivisions of a day.

But the binding force of precedents has been urged to support the right of a convention to make an election of Representatives not only concurrent with, but dependent upon, a vote on a constitution submitted by said convention to the people. Again and again, but in vain, have the supporters of the proposition been asked to produce a single instance of a State in the Union whose Legislature, bound by the constitutional injunction to prescribe a time for such election, has thus loosely and perfunctorily performed its duty.

But from certain Territories or provincialized States their precedents are drawn. In Territories which have been preparing to leave their condition of pupilage and enter upon the full manhood of States, and while still remaining under the broad and sweeping powers of Congress over such political fledgelings, cases have been sought analogous to the one now under consideration. Whenever such an election has been held in a Territory, or in a State stripped, by the strong arm of military power, of its sovereign rights, it has all been done under an enabling act, or ratified under the act admitting such Territory into the Union.

In the case of a Territory the whole proceedings were begun and ended under those provisions of the Federal Constitution which vest in Congress the power to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory of the United States, and to admit new States into the Union. There is no need to impress into the case that terrible doctrine of necessity, which threatens to prove the rapid consumption of all legitimate and healthy constitutional laws.

The powers alluded to are surely broad enough to enable Congress to ratify any act prior to admission, which might have been irregular or abnormal in a State already represented in Congress. The power to admit a new State surely implies the power to ratify all that the people of a Territory may have done before admission to enable it to take its proper place among its compeers. Such cases are different in circumstances and in constitutional rules controlling them from this West Virginia case, where the simple inquiry is, whether the Legislature of a State in the Union has done its constitutional duty.

And as for those Southern States which have been subjected to the harsh processes of reconstruction, I hope, in common fairness, that no one will quote what was then done as a precedent for legitimate constitutional construction. Born, as was acknowledged, out of the necessities of the case; springing from the undefined and undefinable war powers of the Government over conquered States held as subjugated territory; carried into effect through the agency of the military power, which made the sword to write the lists of voters, and to guard the approaches to the ballot-boxes, these reconstruction measures, whatever may have been their merits or demerits as political expedients, can legitimately be quoted as precedents for nothing but the worthlessness of paper constitutions.

Surely, precedents drawn from military departments cannot be of higher authority than those taken from Territories, which, before and since bleeding Kansas, have been left free to frame their own institutions in their own way. More especially, I should think, those gentlemen in this House who heard "the great commoner" from Pennsylvania, then the leader of the republican phalanx here, declare in no very reverent manner the simple truth that "he was worse than a fool who supposed they were pretending to act within the limits of the Constitution" in passing these reconstruction laws, can hardly without a smile hear them quoted as precedents in any serious constitutional argument. If they can, I will only say that in the political as well as in the moral world, "Facilis descensus Averni."

And now I will say a few words about the October election, as to which I am compelled to differ from most of my friends on this side of the House. Although I think the argument is not so utterly conclusive against the October election, and although I am anxious to vote for validating one of them, so as to settle this vexed question forever, yet I cannot bring myself to believe that the Legislature of West Virginia ever intended that the fourth Thursday of October should continue to be the day of congressional election after it ceased to be a day for the general election.

Now, what is the point to be elicited by this discussion? Beyond question, it must be the intention of that Legislature in enacting the first and second sections of the third chapter of the code, and nothing else. It is not what they had the right to do, but what they did. It is not fair or legitimate, as I think, to form an a priori theory of their constitutionality, based upon a refined and recondite process of reasoning not suggesting itself to the general mind, and then to deduce the conclusion that they did not mean to do a certain thing, because so to infer "would be to assume that they neither did nor intended to do their duty."

But how are we to ascertain their intention? First, by examining the language employed, and then the circumstances surrounding the lawgivers. The question is, to what do the words "at the said elections," in the said second section of the third chapter of the code, most naturally and properly refer in the preceding first section? The phrase implies that some sort of an election has just been named. Is it of a peculiar kind? Yes; it is a remarkable event in the history of the year—a general election. The time of it, the fourth Thursday of October, gives it no distinctive character; but the general character of it distinguishes the day from all others in the year.

Now, let me ask any unbiased mind, do the words "at the said elections" most naturally refer to this noteworthy and unique event, or to the simple and by no means singular circumstance of the day named? Surely the event is the principal thing specified, and the day is the mere incident; so that, if any competent authority should simply change the event to another day, everything which is made dependent in the second section upon the words "at the said elections" will follow such event to such new day. And that this is the plain and natural construction is, I think, evidenced by this consideration, that if the Legislature had possessed the power, and had exercised it, to change the day of the general election in the fewest and simplest words, that new day would have instantly attracted to it the election of every officer named in the said second section of chapter 3 of the code, members of Congress not excepted. No one will deny this, for just such legislation in other States has often had just such effect.

The answer attempted is that the Legislature would have had the power to pass such an act so far as a congressional election is concerned, which a convention has not; and therefore it might well be conceded to have such an effect. The reply is palpable. The right to enact may limit the effect of a law, but it cannot so modify the plain meaning of words that what is the manifest meaning of words when there is a power conceded shall be tortured into the precisely opposite meaning when the power is denied, particularly when the denial of the power is even now ably combated by hosts of lawyers, and based upon subtle distinctions lately raised, and probably never suggested to the mind of the lawgiver at all.

Such being the intention of the Legislature, as derived from their language, what light do the circumstances surrounding the Legislature shed upon these sections of the code? Why, sir, the learned and able lawyers who contend that the words "at the said elections" do not refer to the event of the general election, but are pinned down to the fourth Thursday of October, even after the general election is transferred by a new constitution to another day, most strangely forget that the Legislature had no more power than you or I had to dissociate a single State or county officer named in that second section from the event of the general election.

The old constitution established the event of the general election, fixed it on the fourth Thursday of October, and ordained what officers should be thereat elected. A new constitution alone could transfer that general election to a new day; and it should exercise such power. The framers of the code fully knew that all the officials named in the second section, who were creatures of State law, would march straight with the event to the new day for a renewal of official life. How can it be said, then, with the faintest show of reason, that the code does not mean by the words "at the said elections" to connect the election of the State and county officers enumerated in the said second section inseparably with the event of a general election, when its framers were as helpless as babes to effect any other result?

The meaning of the words could not be plainer if it had been said "at the said general election and inseparably therefrom." But if such is and must be the meaning of the words with regard to senators, delegates, governor, treasurer, attorney-general, and every other official named in the second section, except the Representative in Congress, who will say that such Representative, placed as he is in the very center of the list, and included as he is in identically the same language, is not intended to be embraced in precisely the same category?

The able gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] laid great stress on the fact that the phrase "at the general election" was used to introduce the fourth and other sections of the third chapter of the code; whereas the words "at the said elections" were employed to begin the second section. He himself has furnished us with one good reason. The third section is interjected between the first two sections (which we are now discussing) and the others, and prescribes for a different election and another day. Hence the use of the phrase "at the said elections," to introduce the fourth section, would have been indefinite and misleading. But the gentleman yields the whole point when he concedes that "if the compilers of the code had intended that the congressional election should hinge on the general State election they would have used the words 'at the general election' to introduce the second section." We have shown that such was their meaning, because it could not be anything else; and that, it would seem, is an end of the question.

The Legislature knew, too, as historical facts, that the election of members of Congress had always been made in that State coincident with the event of a general election; that it was the policy of the State, from economic and other considerations, to avoid a multiplicity of elections; and that it had been long the custom of the parent State to make the election of Congressmen coincident and ambulatory with some other event. To cause the election of Congressmen to follow the general election was to them natural, reasonable, and politic; and not, in spirit at least, new legislation. They had not enjoyed the benefit of the truly able and original arguments against the constitutionality of such legislation to which we have listened, and which, profound as they are, will probably not be able to convert a majority of this House; and we cannot, therefore, suppose that their intentions in enacting said first and second sections of the code were much influenced by such subtleties.

If, then, Mr. Speaker, it was and must have been the intention of the code to make the election of Representatives follow the general election, and if the new constitution of 1872 has repealed the fourth Thursday of October as the day of the general election, as it most surely has done, the election of Congressmen then held was without legislative sanction and void. If the convention of 1872 had only pretermitted its bungling device of electing officers on the 22d of August, and had permitted these officers to be chosen on the second Tuesday of October, the new general election day, then we do not believe that the gentlemen from New York, Pennsylvania, and Mississippi would have ever directed any of their heavy artillery against those of us who advocate the intention of the Legislature to change the congressional election with the event of the general election; but we believe that members of this House would have been then elected, and have taken their seats on this floor without challenge or dissent from anybody. It would have been generally conceded that the code itself fixed such election on the second Tuesday of October as the new day; and all these old-fashioned weapons, labeled "repugnant laws," and "repeals by implication," and such like, would have been left to rust in the armories of our knights of the law.

The only argument, Mr. Speaker, against my construction of the meaning of the code which it remains for me to notice is the novel and ingenious one so strongly urged by the learned and fair-minded chairman of the Election Committee. He insists that the election of Representatives has been absolutely provided for in the first section of the third chapter of the code, under the term of "district officers."

Ingenious and original as is this view, we cannot concur in it; for it is the application to members of this House of a descriptive name, such as was never before and probably never will be again, bestowed upon them. They are Federal officials, named in the Constitution itself "Representatives in Congress." It can hardly be supposed that the Legislature intended to christen them with a new name, merely from the accidental circumstance of their being elected by people living within certain districts of the State. I might believe they intended so to do if they in so many words declared it; but I cannot be induced to refer to the gentleman now on this floor from that State as "the district officer from West Virginia," by any intricate or artificial process of reasoning such as that the chairman of the committee so ingeniously employs. I must believe that, as all the other generic names used in the said first section, "State," "county," and "township," refer to West Virginia officers proper, so also does the term "district" apply solely to circuit judges, who were really State officers, because each of them might have been required to do circuit duty in any other circuit than the one in which he was elected; but being so elected by the people of a limited district, the code denominates him a district officer, so as to provide a generic name that would include him, if the name of State officer did not. It was only a new term, introduced out of abundant caution.

I believe then, Mr. Speaker, that neither the fourth Thursday of August nor of October was the legal day for an election of Representatives in the State of West Virginia, and that neither set of claimants is entitled to a seat on this floor. The intention of the code being to make the election of Representatives follow the event of the general election, and the second Tuesday of October being the new general election day, that surely would have been the day prescribed by the code for the election of members of this House, if a general election had then occurred. If the event of a general election did not, from any cause, happen on that day, it is by no means a clear logical sequence that Representatives should not have been then chosen. If the fourth Thursday of October had not been repealed as the day for a general election in West Virginia, but from some temporary cause had only been pretermitted as the day for the election of State officers, the argument of the majority of the committee, grounded upon the legal presumption of the Legislature's intention to do its whole constitutional duty, and to provide a time absolutely for the election of Congressmen, would have had great force toward establishing the election held on that day.

It might have been said, with a logic difficult to evade, that although the Legislature intended to make the election of members of this House concurrent with the event of the general election of State officers, yet the fact that the two events were intended to be concurrent does not prove that the former was intended to be rendered absolutely dependent upon the latter. Every event has in it an element of time. If the principal event of the general election fails, the time remains. In obedience to their duty, under the paramount law of the land, the Legislature might make the election of Congressmen concurrent with, but not dependent upon, the event of a general election.

It is a fair presumption, then, that if the event should fail, they intended that the election of Congressmen should occur at the time fixed for the event. But both the event and the time were repealed so far as the fourth Thursday of October is concerned, and the second Tuesday of the same month substituted as the day of the general election. And to this day is applicable all the wealth of reasoning which the committee have lavished on the fourth Thursday.

But, Mr. Speaker, whatever may be the true conclusion in the case, drawn by labored reasoning from the premises, we cannot shut our eyes to the fact that the most serious question, the gravest doubt exists, what day, if any, was legally prescribed for the election of Congressmen in West Virginia during the year 1872. When this question was discussed here in December, as well as now, the widest and most radical differences of opinion prevailed; and no man can now tell, unless party drill is applied, how the House will decide these cases. When able lawyers here and in West Virginia, after mature deliberation, have disagreed, and now differ as to which was the legal day, if either was, all must concede that it is a question far above the general mind, and by which it must be utterly befogged. Beyond question, too, this doubt and uncertainty either caused tens of thousands of electors to absent themselves from the polls, or, if present, to refuse to vote for Representatives in Congress.

It is impossible for mortal man to say what would have been the result in a single district at either election if no questions of this kind had been raised on the subject. The people did not and could not know what the law was, and did not and could not vote intelligently in the premises. They had a right to know. It was the duty of the law-maker to give them a reasonable assurance on this vital point. It was a right guaranteed to them by the paramount law of the land. It will not do to say that every man is bound to know the law. These old legal maxims, intended to control men with respect to all the multitudinous rights of personal property, and having their origin away back in the dim and distant past, when popular rights scarcely existed, much less were protected, have no place when we come to consider the safeguards of the elective franchise and of the great modern fundamental right of representation.

This is not the case of a man, or a party of men, against a man or a company of men about some rights of person or property, in which one side pleads ignorance of the law, and desires to escape from the effects of any acts or laches based upon such alleged ignorance. In such a case a thousand reasons might be given for denying such a plea which would be inappropriate here. It was the right of every citizen of West Virginia to know in 1872, with all reasonable certainty and in advance of the time, what was to be the day when he should be called upon to discharge the momentous duty of selecting his Representative in this Hall, who should speak for him upon all the grave matters of finance and taxation, peace and war. If that day was not definitely prescribed and properly promulgated, so that the citizen could know when he should discharge his duty and exercise his privilege, it was at one and the same time a breach of the rights of every man, woman, and child in the State. It was not only a surprise but a wholesale fraud upon the voters, perpetrated by the law-givers themselves, only less glaring than if they had neglected even the attempt to prescribe the time.

Why, sir, nearly one-half of the electors of the State were at the polls in August and did not vote for Congressmen. Less than one-fourth of them attended and voted in October. We have the clearest evidence that this refusal upon the part of voters resulted from their inability to ascertain with any reasonable certainty what day, if any, the Legislature had prescribed for the election.

No case could be devised more flagrant than this, to demonstrate the absurdity of recognizing such a prescription of the time of an election as that which the people of West Virginia had in 1872. In one district, before the August election, both parties met in convention, and both agreed August was not the time, and adjourned without making a nomination. Just before the 22d of August, a member of one of these conventions sprung himself on the people, had his name put on the ballots of such voters as he could induce to vote for him, and having received not a tithe of the votes cast in the same district upon the constitution, comes here and claims a seat as duly elected.

To call this a discreditable trick is to deal very tenderly with it.

And if the August election is sustained, this man will be admitted in spite of all the doubts of law and the most damning facts. On the other hand, another man was beaten in August upon a full poll, brought out by the vote on the constitution, and being again a candidate in October, was elected by not much over the tenth of the voters of his district, none others scarcely having voted at all. And yet this man will be admitted if the October election is validated. Such monstrous results would not have arisen if the Legislature had done its full constitutional duty, and properly prescribed the time with reasonable clearness and certainty.

And finally, Mr. Speaker, we may not have, as it is said, any precedents in the books for such a case. If so, it is because the circumstances are novel and peculiar. But now that they have arisen, if we fail to recommit these cases to the Committee on Elections, with a view to having them sent back to the people of West Virginia, so that they may have the essential requisite of a proper notice of the time, place, and manner of electing their Representatives in this House, we shall fail to discharge toward them what I conceive to be a plain and imperative duty.

Mr. SPEER. As it is about time to adjourn I will yield for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. WILSON] has been speaking in the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SPEER?]

Mr. SPEER. Not at all; it was not so understood by the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] will take the fractional remainder of the hour of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. WILSON,] after which the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be next recognized.

POSTAL-CAR CLERKS AND EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent to submit for adoption the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be directed to report to the House the number of postal car clerks and employés now employed on the lines between Washington and New York, New York and Boston, between New York, Albany, Buffalo, and Suspension Bridge; the gross amount of their annual compensation; the amount paid for the transportation of the mail on said lines, and what additional compensation the railroads demand for this service; also the number of daily express trains on each of said routes; the reduction in expense and acceleration of the service that can be effected by the withdrawal of the postal cars from the said routes and substituting a more frequent service by dispatching the mails on the express and local trains running, or that may hereafter be run on said routes.

Mr. KELLOGG. I object to the adoption of the resolution. Let it be referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Massachusetts. Very well; I will not object.

The resolution was referred accordingly.

DUTY ON HOPS.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1552) to increase the duties on hops imported into this country; which was read a first and second time, referred, with the accompanying memorial, to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

PREVENTION OF FRAUD IN IMPORTATION.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, by unanimous consent, introduced resolutions relating to the prevention of fraud in importing foreign goods; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

TREADWELL S. AYRES.

Mr. DUNNELL, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on Claims the petition and papers of Treadwell S. Ayres, claiming compensation for occupation and use of building by the Army at Memphis; and moved that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that the same be referred to the Committee on War Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM M. CHENAULT.

Mr. COBB, of Kansas, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to transmit to this House copies of the papers on file in his Department relative to the claim of the heirs of the late William M. Chenault, of Missouri, for property taken by the Government.

APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. LAWRENCE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on the Rules:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Rules be, and are hereby, instructed to inquire into the expediency of amending the rules so that appropriation bills may provide for a reduction in the number and pay of officers, and that amendments for such purpose may also be in order.

DEBATE ON ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. COBURN, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on the Rules:

Resolved, That the forty-fourth rule be so amended that the motion to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn may be debatable.

OFFICIAL STAMPS FOR POSTMASTERS.

Mr. PLATT, of New York. I ask unanimous consent to submit for adoption the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be, and he hereby is, requested to furnish to the House of Representatives a list of postmasters furnished with stamps for official use, and the amount to each, since July 1, 1873.

Mr. KELLOGG. Let that be referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. PLATT, of New York. Very well.

The resolution was referred accordingly.

CHIPPEWA INDIANS IN MICHIGAN.

Mr. HUBBELL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1553) for the relief of the L'Anse and Vieux de Sert bands of Chippewa Indians in the State of Michigan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

REMISSION OF DUTIES ON A CHIME OF BELLS.

Mr. ELLIOTT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1554) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to remit the duties paid on a chime of bells imported for the Protestant Episcopal church of the parish of Saint Michael, in Charleston, in the State of South Carolina; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

SPAIN—FLORIDA.

Mr. COX. I ask unanimous consent to submit for adoption the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be requested, if not incompatible with public interests, to communicate to the House of Representatives the recent correspondence relating to the ninth article of the treaty of 1819, between the United States and Spain, respecting Florida.

Mr. HOLMAN, Under the rule that resolution should be referred to a committee.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I object to it.

Mr. COX. It has nothing to do with the late Spanish difficulty.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I understand the resolution; let it go to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. COX. The subject is before the committee, and we want the papers.

The motion was not received.

PAYMENT OF FEMALE NURSES.

Mr. LOFLAND, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1555) to provide for the payment of female nurses during the war; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

TAX ON MANUFACTURED TOBACCO.

Mr. WHITEHEAD. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution, for reference to the Committee on Manufactures:

Resolved, That the Committee on Manufactures be directed to inquire into, and report whether, the tax on manufactured tobacco and the mode of its collection have operated to decrease the number of factories and laborers engaged in its manufacture in the United States and to increase the manufacture in foreign countries.

The SPEAKER. This subject belongs to the Committee on Ways and Means, and the resolution will be so referred.

TREASURY CONTRACTS FOR RECOVERY OF MONEY, ETC.

Mr. FOSTER. I ask unanimous consent for the adoption of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to this House copies of all contracts made by the Treasury Department, under authority to him given in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1873, and for other purposes," approved May 8, 1872, in the following words, viz:

"And from and after the passage of this act the Secretary of the Treasury shall have power to employ not more than three persons to assist the proper officers of the Government in discovering and collecting any money belonging to the United States, whenever the same shall be withheld by any person or corporation, upon such terms and conditions as he shall deem best for the interests of the United States; but no compensation shall be paid to such persons except out of the money and property so secured; and no person shall be employed under the provisions of this clause who shall not have fully set forth in a written statement, under oath, addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury, the character of the claim out of which he proposes to recover, or assist in recovering, moneys for the United States, the laws by the violation of which the same have been withheld, and the name of the person, firm, or corporation having thus withheld such moneys; and if any person so employed shall receive, or attempt to receive, any money or other consideration from any person, firm, or corporation, alleged thus to have withheld money from the United States, except in pursuance of the written contract made in relation thereto with the Secretary of the Treasury, such person shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $1,000, or imprisoned not less than two years, or both, in the discretion of any court of the United States having jurisdiction; and the person so employed shall be required to make report of his proceedings under such contract at any time when required to do so by the Secretary of the Treasury."

Mr. KELLOGG. Let the resolution be referred.

Mr. FOSTER. It is all right,

Mr. KELLOGG. I must object to it unless it be referred.

Mr. FOSTER. Very well; let it go to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, it will be so referred.

There was no objection.

POST-ROUTES.

Mr. STOWELL. The bill (H. R. No. 798) to establish certain post-routes has come back from the Senate with certain amendments. I ask unanimous consent that the amendments be concurred in. The bill contains no legislation whatever.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust that this bill may be allowed to go over until to-morrow.

Mr. RANDALL. It had better be referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads; there may be some things in it that ought to be examined.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the bill will be so referred.

There was no objection.

EDWARD P. JOHNSON.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. No. 421) for the relief of Edward P. Johnson, upon which an adverse report was made by the Committee on Military Affairs, be recommitted to that committee, that they may examine additional papers in reference to the matter.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the bill will be recommitted.

There was no objection.

And then, on motion of Mr. BURCHARD, (at four o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, memorials, and other papers, were laid on the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. ARMSTRONG: The petition of citizens of Northern Dakota, for the organization of a new territory north of the forty-sixth parallel of latitude, to the Committee on Territories.

Also, the petition of citizens of Dakota Territory, for a modification of the law to encourage forest planting on western prairies, to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. BARNUM: The remonstrance of Henry D. Fox and others, hat manufacturers, of Connecticut, against any further extension of the patent granted to Henry A. Wells, April 25, 1846, for improvements in machinery for making hat-bodies, to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. BLAINE: The petition of Lincoln W. Tibbetts, for compensation for services rendered the Government in 1860–'61, to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BRADLEY: The petition of citizens of Gratiot County, Michigan, for change of a post-route, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. BROWN: The petition of William L. Berry, of Kentucky, for indemnification for the destruction of his distillery by a mob in 1871, to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BUCKNER: The petition of Horatio S. Chalmers, for the payment of the French spoliation claims, to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, the petition of druggists, of Saint Charles, Missouri, for the repeal of the stamp tax on medicines, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts: The petition of Eugene Beebe, of New York, for the passage of a law authorizing the issue of two hundred millions of United States notes redeemable in coin on the 1st of January, 1885, to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, the memorial of Seth Driggs, claimant under the treaty with Venezuela, for relief, to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, the remonstrance of Brown & Wilcox and others, manufacturers, wholesale dealers, and retailers of hats in the city of Boston, against the extension of the Wells patent, to the Committee on Patents.

Also, several petitions of citizens of Massachusetts, for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the liquor traffic, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CHAFFEE: Several petitions of citizens of Colorado Territory, for the passage of an act to enable the people of Colorado Territory to form a State government and be admitted to the Union, to the Committee on Territories.

Also, several petitions from citizens of Colorado Territory, asking that the branch mint at Denver be put upon a coinage basis, to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Also, petitions of members of the bar of Colorado Territory, for the appointment of two additional judges in said Territory, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CHIPMAN: The petition of Mary Ann Eaton, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CLARK, of Missouri: The petition of J. & R. H. Porter, for the payment of an award made by the Third Auditor, May 10, 1861, for oxen, mules, and wagons impressed by Colonel Albert S. Johnston, in command of United States forces, on the way to Utah Territory, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CLAYTON: Resolutions of the Legislature of California, in relation to public lands granted in aid of the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Folsom to Placerville, in California, to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, the petition of citizens of Del Norte County, California, for the improvement of Crescent Harbor, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. COBB, of North Carolina: The petition of Emille Lepage, surviving partner of the firm of Lepage & Brothers, for compensation for twenty-five bales of cotton, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. COBURN: A communication from Hon. W. W. Belknap, Secretary of War, inclosing draught of a bill authorizing the issue of tobacco to enlisted men of the Army, as a component part of the Army ration, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CONGER: The memorial of William Wickersham, in behalf of patentees in the United States, to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. COX: Several remonstrances of hat manufacturers in New York City and in New Jersey, against the extension of the Wells patent, to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. DARRALL: The petition of citizens of Iberville Parish, Louisiana, for the payment of the claim of the Southern Methodist publishing house at Nashville, Tennessee, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. DUELL: Several remonstrances of citizens of Onondaga County, New York, against the restoration of duties on tea and coffee, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. FARWELL: The remonstrance of hat manufacturers of Chicago, Illinois, against the extension of the Wells patent, to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. FRYE: The petition of citizens of Carroll County, New Hampshire, and of Oxford County, Maine, for the establishment of a post-route from Conway, New Hampshire, by the way of Eaton, to Brownfield Center, Maine, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, the petition of Jarvis Patten, of Bath, Maine, for the payment of the French spoliation claims, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HATCHER: The petition of citizens of Missouri, for the establishment of certain post-routes, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut: The petition of hat manufacturers of Hartford, Connecticut, against the extension of the Wells patent, to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. HENDEE: The petition of John N. Reed, for relief, to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HYDE: The petition of Mary Sinclair, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HYNES: The petition of Jackson Case, for relief, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KELLOGG: The petition of Grace B. Peck, widow of Captain Elisha Peck, for the difference of pay between that drawn as a commander in the Navy by her late husband and that of captain, to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. LAWRENCE: The petition of druggists of Piqua, Ohio, for the repeal of the stamp tax on medicines, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LOUGHRIDGE: The petition of John Box, for relief, to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LOWE: Papers relating to the claim of Spencer & Mead, for supplies furnished the Kansas Indians, to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. LUTTRELL: The petition of citizens of California, for a post-route from Mendocino to Ukiah City, California, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. LYNCH: The petition of citizens of East Pascagoula, Mississippi, for the improvement of the mouth of the Pascagoula River, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. McFADDEN: Several petitions from citizens of Washington Territory, for the removal of obstructions from Skaget River, to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the petition of citizens of Washington Territory, for the construction of a military wagon-road from Walla Walla to Puget Sound, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, the memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Washington, for the construction of a wagon-road from Cathlamet to Boisford Prairie, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, the memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Washington, for the removal of obstructions in the Columbia River, to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Washington, praying that certain streams and sloughs in Snohomish County may be declared navigable, to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Washington, praying for the establishment of a land office at Port Townsend, to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, the memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Washington, for the improvement of the south fork of Lewis River, to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Washington, for the establishment of a mail-route from Seattle to Wallula, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, the memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Washington, in relation to vacating the Government reservation at Port Angeles, to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, the memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Washington, for the removal of obstructions from the Skaget and Noot-Saak Rivers, to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Washington, in relation to the annexation of a portion of Idaho Territory, to the Committee on the Territories.

Also, the memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Washington, in relation to a military road from Fort Walla Walla to Puget Sound, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, the memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Washington, for the removal of obstructions from the Chehalis River, to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, the memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Washington, praying Congress to grant to William Romaine exclusive privilege to construct a boom for logs in the Snohomish River, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. NEAL: The petition of the First National Bank of Greenfield, Ohio, for the payment of $4,000 in lieu of that amount of legal-tender notes destroyed by fire, to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. NEGLEY: The petition of Charles B. Madden, for relief, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. O'NEILL: The petition of Willian B. Thomas, late collector of customs at Philadelphia, for reimbursement of certain moneys paid by him into the United States Treasury, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, the petition of citizens of Philadelphia, for the redemption of United States notes by issue of bonds payable on demand in legal-tender notes, to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. ORTH: The petition of William A. W. Daly, for relief, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition praying for the passage of a law by Congress, known as the "Indiana plan of financial relief," from the following counties of Indiana, to wit: 1,707 citizens of Marion County; 140 of Decatur; 74 of Jackson; 199 of Howard; 253 of Clinton; 116 of Clark; 345 of Madison; 222 of Fayette; 199 of Clay; 124 of Vanderburgh; 28 of Elkhart; 58 of Park; 64 of Montgomery; 158 of Boone; 85 of Putnam; 68 of Floyd; 48 of Gibson; 37 of Miami; 24 of Knox; 20 of Newton; 30 of Randolph; 51 of Delaware; 63 of Rush: 27 of Noble; 28 of Posey; 42 of Greene; 7 of Lawrence; 1 of Morgan; 217 of Fulton; 73 of Marshall; 33 of Spencer; 14 of Hendricks; 24 of Porter; 24 of Jefferson; 30 of Huntington; 26 of Tippecanoe; 30 of Daviess; 24 of Steuben; 22 of Franklin; 20 of Crawford; 87 of Lake; 91 of Morgan; 91 of Tipton; 28 of Dubois; and 42 of Benton, to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. PARKER, of New Hampshire: The petition of Charles H. Carpenter and others, for the removal of the National Bank at Pittsfield, New Hampshire, to Manchester, to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. PARSONS: The petition of S. N. Goodale, for relief, to the Committee on Claims.

Also, the remonstrance of hat manufacturers of Cleveland, Ohio, against the extension of the Wells patent, to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. PIERCE: The petition of Clarissa D. Swain, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, the petition of the Union Temple church, of Boston, Massachusetts, signed by Rev. George C. Lorimer, pastor, and other officers, for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the liquor traffic, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. READ: The petition of Thomas J. Dews, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, the petition of Sarah Cully, for a pension, to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and War of 1812.

By Mr. ROSS: Resolutions of the Lumbermen's Exchange of Williamsport, Pennsylvania, in favor of the issue of bonds convertible and reconvertible into legal-tender notes, to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, the petition of citizens of Lycoming County, Pennsylvania, of similar import, to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. RUSK: The petition of citizens of Wisconsin, for additional duty on hops, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, the petition of the Prescott Grange, patrons of husbandry, for the improvement of the Mississippi, Fox, and Wisconsin Rivers, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio: The remonstrance of wholesale hatters of Cincinnati, against the extension of the Wells patent, to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. SENER: The petition of John W. and Thomas G. Elliott, for relief, with accompanying papers, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SHEATS: The petition of the Board of Trade of Mobile, Alabama, for the improvement of Mobile Bay, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. SHELDON: The petition of Eliza E. Hebert, for relief, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SOUTHARD: The petition of Anthony Diss, for relief, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, the petition of Joel D. Mosgrove, for relief, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. STANDEFORD: The petition of Sallie Rivers, for a pension, to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and War of 1812.

By Mr. TOWNSEND: The petition of citizens of Pennsylvania, for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the liquor traffic, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. TYNER: The petition of De Witt C. Chipman, for relief, to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WADDELL: The petition of citizens of Cumberland County, North Carolina, for the payment of the claim of the Southern Methodist publishing house at Nashville, Tennessee, to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, the petition of citizens of Moore County, North Carolina, of similar import, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WELLS: The remonstrance of hat manufacturers of Saint Louis, against the extension of the Wells patent, to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. WHEELER: The petition of F. T. Heath and others, druggists, for the repeal of the stamp tax on medicines, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WHITEHEAD: A paper relating to the establishment of a post-route in Virginia, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. WILBER: The petition of George A. Lamb, for relief, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont: The petition of John H. Landerville, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIAMS, of Massachusetts: The petition of Isabella L. Nichols, of Watertown, Massachusetts, for a pension, to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and War of 1812.

By Mr. WILSON, of Iowa: A paper relating to the establishment of a post-route in Iowa, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 27, 1874.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report from the Secretary of War, communicating, in obedience to law, information in regard to a contract for the care of transient paupers in Providence Hospital, in the city of Washington; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The PRESIDENT of the Senate pro tempore signed the following enrolled bills, which had previously received the signature of the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

A bill (H. R. No. 795) making appropriations to pay for reporting the debates and proceedings of Congress; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1218) to provide for the purchase of fire-extinguishers for the Capitol building.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 971) to forfeit to the United States certain lands granted to the Placerville and Sacramento Valley Railroad Company, to aid in constructing a railroad from the town of Folsom to the town of Placerville, in the State of California, and the bill (H. R. No. 1168) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for the removal of the Flathead and other Indians from the Bitter Root Valley, in the Territory of Montana," approved June 5, 1872, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. STEVENSON. I move that the Chair be authorized to fill the vacancy upon the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. KELLY.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented three petitions of citizens of the United States who were soldiers in the late war, or are the heirs of such, praying to be granted one hundred and sixty acres of land, for the equalization of bounties, and for the amendment of the pension laws; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. THURMAN. I hold in my hand several petitions of the same character as those presented by the President of the Senate. I ought to observe, perhaps, in reference to one, or rather two of these petitions, a thing that has been noticed very frequently in petitions presented to this body, that nearly or quite all of the signatures to the petition are in the same handwriting. I do not feel at liberty, however, to refuse to present the petitions on that account, coming to me as they do from a responsible source, a respectable gentleman, who I do not think would attempt to impose upon the Senate; but really the practice is calculated to lead to very great abuse. I have again and again, several times at this session of the Senate been called upon to present to the Senate petitions, every signature of which was in the same handwriting. I do not know, unless the Senate make some rule upon the subject, that the evil can be corrected. When these petitions come to us from respectable persons, we feel bound to present them. I send these petitions to the Clerk, and move their reference to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. THURMAN. I also present to the Senate the petition of W. W. Corcoran, George W. Riggs, John B. Clagett, W. Gunton, Marshall Brown, Joseph B. Bryan, S. J. Bowen, A. E Perry, and a number of others of the largest property-holders in this District, praying that the investigation asked for in the petition presented the other day, into the management of the affairs of this District by the District government, may take place; and as this petition is brief, and is characterized by great moderation and great propriety, I ask that it may be read, and then that it may lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be read if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

Your petitioners respectfully represent that they are citizens of the District of Columbia, owning property subject to taxation therein; that they are willing to bear their full proportion of the taxes needed to improve the cities in said District, but desire, as reasonable persons, that said taxes should, when collected, be honestly, economically, and prudently expended, and in making, so far as it is possible, durable and not merely temporary improvements; that grave accusations have been made and widely circulated by the newspapers of the country, reflecting upon the integrity of the officers of the present District government, and charging them with gross mismanagement of its affairs; that the good name of said District government has greatly suffered thereby and great scandal been brought upon said officers, to the injury of all the citizens of said District.

Your petitioners further respectfully represent that an investigation has been asked for from the House of Representatives of the present Congress, on behalf of these officers; but an investigation so limited by the terms of the application itself that it must prove wholly inadequate and unsatisfactory, being restricted to an inspection of books kept by said officers themselves or their subordinates.

Your petitioners further respectfully represent that they are informed that certain other citizens, likewise tax-payers in said District, have prepared, and are ready to present to your honorable body, a petition specifically charging serious omissions of duty on the part of said officers in managing the affairs of said District.

Your petitioners further respectfully represent that they believe that an investigation, made by an appropriate committee of your honorable body, will meet with the unqualified approbation, not only of the people of said District, but of the whole country; that they likewise believe that a full, searching, and thorough investigation is due to these very officers, charged, by reputable newspapers and responsible citizens, with malfeasance in office.

And they earnestly assure your honorable body that if, after such an investigation, the innocence of these officers should be made manifest, it would be a matter of great satisfaction to your petitioners.

Whereupon, disclaiming all intention of reflecting upon any member of your honorable body, they humbly pray that a joint select committee may be chosen by your honorable body, and that the usual and necessary powers may be conferred upon them for the purposes aforesaid.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will lie upon the table.

Mr. STEVENSON presented the petition of Birch Musselman and other citizens of Louisville, Kentucky, praying for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, its relations to pauperism, crime, the public health, and general welfare; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SCOTT presented the petition of Job H. Jackson, and the petition of Charles H. McIlvaine, and 270 others, praying for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, its relations to pauperism, crime, the public health, and general welfare; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of a large number of citizens of Ohio, praying for the repeal of all laws exempting church property from taxation in the District of Columbia and in the Territories; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN presented the petition of Saint John's Methodist Episcopal church of Jersey City Heights, New Jersey, signed by the pastor and officers, praying for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, its relations to pauperism, crime, the public health, and general welfare; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PRATT. I present the petition of J. P. Thatcher and 47 other citizens of Indiana, and the petition of D. H. Holloway and other citizens of Indiana, praying for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, its relations to pauperism, crime, the public health, and general welfare. I understand the committee to whom petitions of this character were addressed have made a report, and with it a bill. If that is the case, I move that these petitions lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BOUTWELL presented the petition of the Congregational church of Saugus Center, Massachusetts, signed by the pastor, praying for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, its relations to pauperism, crime, the public health, and general welfare; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. INGALLS presented the petition of Samuel B. Lauffer, of Greensburgh, Pennsylvania, praying for an increase of pension, to relieve him from present necessity; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Kansas, praying for the enactment of a law recognizing the belligerent rights of the Cubans; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented the petition of Dennis Carroll, praying compensation for injuries sustained by the falling of a building at Leavenworth, Kansas, in 1862, while in the employ of the Government, in the quartermaster's department; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SARGENT presented a resolution of the Legislature of California, asking an appropriation for the removal of the ship Patrician and the rock known as the Noonday Rock, near the entrance to the harbor of San Francisco; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CHANDLER presented a petition of citizens of the United States, who were soldiers in the late war, or the heirs of such, praying to be granted one hundred and sixty acres of land each, the equalization of bounties, and the amendment of the laws on the subject of pensions, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SUMNER presented the petition of citizens of East Saugus, Massachusetts, praying for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, its relations to pauperism, crime, the public health, and general welfare; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SPENCER presented the petition of the Board of Trade of Columbus, Mississippi, praying an appropriation for the improvement of the Tombigbee River, between Pickensville and Fulton; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ALLISON. I present the petitions of residents of Chariton, Lucas County; of Ida, Ida County; of Clinton; of Farley; of Lincoln Center; of Waukon, Allamakee County; of Calamus; of Wheatland; of Galesburgh, Jasper County; of Mount Vernon; of Coldwater; of Stanwood; of Boylan's Grove, Butler County; of Delmar, Clinton County; of Keokuk; of Douglass, Fayette County; of Venus, Madison County; of Sumner; of Pierceville, Van Buren County; of Cerro Gordo County; of Matamoran, Wright County; of Winchester, Van Buren County; of Rock Falls; of Washington township, Wapello County; of Prairie City, Jasper County; of Hillsborough, Henry County; of Mason City, Cerro Gordo County; of Burlington; of Ainsworth; of Fairfax, Linn County; of Grand Mound; of Lake City, Calhoun County; of Fort Atkinson; of Fairfield, Jefferson County; of Albion; of Dyersville, Dubuque County; of Quincy, Adams County; of Dennison, Crawford County; of Spring Hill, Warren County; of Pedee, Cedar County; of Platteville, Taylor County; of Lovilia, Monroe County; of Newell, Buena Vista County; of West Irving; of Hamilton, Marion County; of Peoria, Mahaska County; and of Muscatine; all citizens of Iowa, ex-soldiers, sailors, and seamen of the late rebellion, asking Congress to so modify the homestead laws of the United States, in behalf of the officers, soldiers, sailors, and seamen honorably discharged from the service of the United States, as to dispense with the necessity of actual residence for any particular length of time on their part before receiving title to the lands located by them, and asking for the passage of the bill which was passed by the House of Representatives last year on that subject. These petitions, I will say, are from citizens of every part of the State of Iowa, and together comprise about five thousand names. I move their reference to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOWE presented the petition of S. D. Hudson and other citizens of Janesville, Wisconsin, praying for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, its relations to pauperism, crime, the public health, and general welfare; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CONKLING presented the petition of the Greenwood Baptist church, of Brooklyn, New York, signed by the Rev. A. G. Lawson, pastor, and the officers of the church, praying for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, its relations to pauperism, crime, the public health, and general welfare; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CRAGIN presented the petition of Nancy R. Batchelder and other citizens of New Hampshire, asking for women equal protection with colored men in the exercise of their right to vote; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of Edmund H. Cobb, of New Hampshire, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GOLDTHWAITE presented the petition of Henry A. Peeler, praying to be reimbursed for moneys advanced to the United States consul at Matamoras, Mexico, and expended for the relief of refugee Union men; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. CONKLING, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of John Caleb, praying to be allowed a pension, be taken from the files, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion of Mr. CONKLING, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of John Coonan, praying for an increase of pension, be taken from the files, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion of Mr. CONKLING, it was Ordered, That Emily Agnel have leave to withdraw her petition and papers from the Senate.

On motion of Mr. WINDOM, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Rebecca Marcher be taken from the files, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, it was Ordered, That E. M. Dennison have leave to withdraw his petition and papers from the files of the Senate.

On motion of Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, it was Ordered, That Alfred Spink and D. Wolf have leave to withdraw their petitions and papers from the files.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CAMERON, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 5) to provide for the adjustment and satisfaction of claims of American citizens for spoliations committed by the French prior to the 31st day of July, 1801, reported it without amendment.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 308) for the relief of John Logan, late marshal of the southern district of Illinois, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; which was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 264) for the relief of the Fourth and Fifth Indian Regiments, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. LOGAN. I am also directed by the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 14) in relation to bounties, having reference to a particular regiment, although the bill is general in its application, to report it favorably, and ask that the bill go on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 29) authorizing the Secretary of War to detail medical officers of the Army to inquire into and report upon the causes of epidemic cholera, reported it without amendment.

Mr. KELLY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 100) for the relief of Lieutenant Alonzo V. Richards, reported it without amendment.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 483) to authorize the cancellation of the export bond for a portion of the distilled spirits of John S. Miller, on board of bonded cars of the United States, reported it without amendment.

REPORT OF INDIAN EXPENDITURES.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the motion to print the letter of the Second Auditor, communicating an abstract of the disbursements of the Indian Department, have instructed me to make a report in writing. The committee come to the conclusion that it is not advisable to print this document, because it furnishes very little information—no information of any value—and will cost some $4,000 to print it, but the document should be referred; and the committee recommend that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. In some respects the law has not been complied with.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What are those respects?

Mr. ANTHONY. The law requires that the Second Auditor shall make a list of the delinquents in the Indian Department. This list has not been supplied, and has not been supplied for five or six years.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the report state that there are no delinquents?

Mr. ANTHONY. It is silent on that subject. This is a matter which should have been referred in the beginning to the Committee on Indian Affairs, or the Committee on Appropriations, or the Committee on the Judiciary, which has so wide a jurisdiction; but as it was the pleasure of the Senate to refer it to the Committee on Printing, it was not for us to question but to obey, and we have considered other portions of the subject than that relating to the expediency of printing. I move that the report of the committee be printed. I suppose we can act upon it as well without reading it. I move that the document be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island having submitted a report in writing, moves that the letter of the Second Auditor, which has been mentioned by him, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On the question of that reference I wish to say that I think the Senate under the circumstances ought to adopt a resolution instructing that committee to inquire and report, first, what is the state of delinquency in the Indian Department, if there be any; and, second, what are the reasons that the executive officers of the Government have to give for not complying with the law in reporting to us the state of accounts in their respective Departments. Here we have an important statute which governs the disbursement and application of millions of money every year, and in respect to which statute certain officers of the Government are required to report to us the details, with the names of people who are delinquent in respect to that fund for each year, and the causes, &c. Now, we get a barren statement of names and sums, which is, in its present condition, of no value to anybody, and an entire want of any wholesome compliance with the law whatever in it. Such a state of things as that ought not to go unnoticed; but having entire confidence that the Committee on Appropriations will make such an inquiry as a part of their duty, and will bring the matter again to the notice of the Senate in some way, so that we can ascertain, if it be possible, what the state of these accounts is in respect to this disbursement of public money, I will make no motion of the kind I have indicated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island moves that this report be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHERMAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 385) for the relief of Jacob P. Clark, late register of the United States land office at Olympia, Washington Territory; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WRIGHT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 386) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend 'An act relating to soldiers' and sailors' homesteads,' approved June 8, 1872;" which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PRATT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 387) granting a pension to Captain Benjamin Farley, Company C, Fifth Indiana Cavalry; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CRAGIN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 388) for the relief of William Chandler, late a commander in the Navy of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. KELLY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 389) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the payment of expenses incurred by the Territories of Washington and Oregon in the suppression of Indian hostilities therein in the years 1855 and 1856," approved March 2, 1861; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, (by request,) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 390) to amend an act for the removal of causes in certain cases from the State courts, approved July 27, 1866; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SARGENT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 391) to enable Susan B. Anthony to pay a fine imposed upon her by the district court for the northern district of New York; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

TREATY WITH CHIPPEWAS.

Mr. EDMUNDS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, directed to report to the Senate, as soon as practicable—

First. Whether article 6 of the treaty of February 22, 1855, with the Chippewa Indians is still in force and unexecuted.

Second. That he be directed to report in detail what action, if any, has been taken under said article of said treaty within the last two years.

Third. That he be directed to report what action has been taken under the act of June 8, 1872, entitled "An act to perfect certain land titles" therein described, what amount of lands have been claimed thereunder, what amount of lands have been patented accordingly, and how many different claims thereunder are still pending in the Department.

SENATOR FROM LOUISIANA.

Mr. McCREERY. I move that the credentials of General McMillen as Senator from Louisiana be re-referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the motion?

Mr. MORTON. I can scarcely understand the purpose of that motion now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be done; there can be no objection.

Mr. WEST. I ask what is the motion; I did not hear it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky moves to recommit the credentials of General W. L. McMillen, claiming to be a Senator from Louisiana, to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. WEST. I shall not object, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the order is made.

RAILWAY LEGISLATION.

Mr. MORTON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution I submitted a few days ago, in the nature of instructions to the Committee on Transportation.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Sea-board be instructed to consider and report a bill creating a commission of five eminent and skilled persons, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall examine and make report to Congress what legislation is necessary and practicable in regard to interstate railroads, to promote the following objects: The speedy transportation at reasonable rates of freight and passengers; the safety and comfort of passengers, by providing for the inspection of bridges, tracks, locomotives, and cars; and the reform of any abuses that may exist in consequence of extortion or unjust discriminations in the transportation of freights and passengers; and, in general, what regulations are necessary to promote the efficiency of railroads, the interests of commerce, and the convenience and safety of the traveling public.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is before the Senate, there being no objection to its present consideration.

Mr. MORTON. It is suggested that the word "constitutional" should be inserted before the words "necessary and practicable." I am willing to accept that modification.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be so modified.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, the Constitution declares that—

Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes.

In the celebrated case of Gibbons vs. Ogden, (9 Wheaton,) commerce was defined to be not only "traffic between nations and communities, but intercourse—to describe commercial intercourse between nations and communities in all its branches—and is regulated by prescribing rules for carrying on that intercourse."

Commerce comprehends passengers as well as merchandise; and in the Passenger cases, reported in 7 Howard, the Supreme Court held that statutes passed by the Legislatures of New York and Massachusetts, levying a tax upon passengers arriving in their ports from other States, and foreign nations, were commercial regulations, and void, as in conflict with the provision of the Constitution giving the power to Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States.

Story, in his Commentaries, defines commerce as comprehending every species of intercourse between nations and among the people of the several States, embracing not only traffic and merchandise, but passengers and travelers.

Again he says:

Foreign and domestic intercourse has been universally understood to be within the reach of the power, and that the terms of the Constitution are at all times understood to include power over navigation as well as trade, over intercourse as well as traffic, and that in the practice of other countries, and especially in our own, there has been no diversity of judgment or opinion.

Commerce entirely within the limits of one State is not within the meaning of the Constitution. It must be "commerce among the several States." The word "among" means "intermingled with." Commerce among the several States is commerce that concerns more States than one, and is distinguished from that which relates completely to the interior traffic of a single State. Commerce among the States cannot stop at the boundary line of each State, but may be introduced into the interior, and is clearly distinguishable from that which is entirely internal, which is carried on between man and man in a State, and which does not extend to or affect other States. It is the "commerce among the several States" that Congress has power to regulate.

If Congress has power to regulate commerce, that power must be exercised wherever the subject exists, and must operate upon the subject and those engaged in its prosecution. If it were limited to the jurisdictional lines of the several States, it would be useless and a nullity. In the case of Gibbons vs. Ogden, referred to, the power to regulate is defined to be "the power to prescribe the rule by which commerce is to be governed."

The power to regulate is the power to govern, and the power to govern the whole includes the power to govern the constituent parts.

Under the Confederation each State regulated commerce for itself, and the regulations were in most cases against the other States as much as against foreign nations; and the embarrassments and injuries growing out of these conflicting regulations were among the most powerful causes which led to the formation of the present Government. And in defining the power of Congress over the subject, it was said by the court in the Passenger cases to be the full measure of what the several States possessed before the Constitution was formed, except as to that commerce which is purely internal to a State.

It was intended to give to Congress all the power to supervise, control, and direct the channels and instruments of commerce that it might be necessary for Government to exercise to promote its safety, efficiency, and growth. This power, like all others vested in Congress, is complete in itself, may be exercised to its utmost extent, and acknowledges no limitations other than those prescribed in the Constitution.

The power to regulate commerce necessarily involves the power to regulate the means and instrumentalities by which it is carried on. Without this the power could not be executed. Another clause of the Constitution expressly authorizes Congress to enact all laws necessary to the execution of any of the powers granted.

The old Bank of the United States was held to be constitutional, as an appropriate means of carrying into effect certain enumerated powers granted to Congress, among which was the power to regulate commerce; and the constitutionality of the present system of national banks seems now to be conceded by all parties for substantially the same reason.

In Veazie vs. Moore, (14 Howard,) the Supreme Court said that—

Commerce, in its broadest acceptance, embraces not merely traffic, but the means and vehicles by which it is prosecuted.

And in all the cases in which the question of this power has been considered, the court has treated the means and instrumentalities of its prosecution as being necessarily embraced within it.

Commerce pertains not more to water than to land. The trade and intercourse carried on by caravans across the trackless deserts of Africa are not less commerce than that transported by steamships across the Atlantic. Transportation, whether by land or water, is a necessary part of commerce; and without it there can be no commerce.

Judge McLean said, in the Passenger cases—

That transportation is a part of commerce is no longer an open question.

The power given to Congress is to regulate commerce among the several States, and whatever is necessary to execute the power must be included in it. If commerce cannot be successfully regulated without regulating the means of transportation, the instrument by which it is conducted, then the power to regulate these must be included.

From the very beginning of the Government Congress has assumed the power to regulate and control navigation upon all the navigable rivers, lakes, inlets, and harbors in the United States. This power has been exercised as exclusive except upon canals and rivers which were wholly within the boundaries of one State, and not connecting with the sea, or with navigable waters running into other States. In every instance where the river was a channel of commerce between two or more States, the navigation of it has been controlled exclusively by Congress. This power has been derived entirely from that clause in the Constitution giving Congress the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States. No court or publicist has ever undertaken to derive it from any other source. Story, in his Commentaries, says:

If commerce does not include navigation, the Government of the Union has no direct power over that subject.

In Gibbons vs. Ogden the Supreme Court said:

If commerce does not include navigation, the Government of the Union has no direct power over that subject and can make no law prescribing what shall constitute American vessels or requiring that they shall be navigated by American seamen. Yet this power has been exercised from the commencement of the Government; has been exercised with the consent of all; and has been understood by all to be a commercial regulation.

In Smith vs. Turner, (7 Howard,) the court said:

The transportation of passengers is a branch of commerce, and a tax upon it is a tax upon a commercial operation.

Again, in another case, reported in 12 Peters, the court said:

The power to regulate commerce comprehends the control for that purpose and to the extent necessary of all the navigable waters of the United States which are accessible from States other than those in which they lie, and necessarily includes the power to keep them open and free from any obstruction to their navigation interposed by States or otherwise; and it is for Congress to determine when its full power shall be brought into activity, and as to the regulations and sanctions which shall be provided.

In the Passenger cases, Norris vs. Boston, and Smith vs. Turner, Chief Justice Taney remarked:

It has always been admitted in the discussion upon this clause of the Constitution that the power to regulate commerce includes navigation, and ships, and crews, because they are the ordinary means of commercial intercourse.

Again, he said:

Undoubtedly the ship, although engaged in the transportation of passengers, is a vehicle of commerce, and within the power of regulation granted to the General Government; and I fully assent to the doctrine on that subject laid down in the case of Gibbons vs. Ogden.

Mr. Justice Johnson, in Gibbons vs. Ogden, (9 Wheaton, 229,) said:

Commerce, in its simplest signification, means an exchange of goods; but in the advancement of society, labor, transportation, intelligence, care, and various mediums of exchange, become commodities, and enter into commerce; the subject, the vehicle, the agent, and their various operations, become the objects of commercial regulation. Ship-building, the carrying trade, and propagation of seamen, are such vital agents of commercial prosperity that the nation which could not legislate over these subjects would not possess power to regulate commerce.

And in the same case, Mr. Justice Daniel said:

The power to regulate commerce includes the regulation of the vessel as well as the cargo, and the manner of using the vessel in that commerce.

I might multiply quotations and authorities to show that the sole power which Congress has over navigation is derived from the power to regulate commerce.

Of course all this is to be understood as applicable only to commerce among the several States, and not to apply to that which is exclusively confined to the interior of one State. As an illustration of the latter, it has been said that a ferry-boat plying across a river in the interior of a State is not required to take out license under the act of Congress, because it is not engaged in commerce among the several States; and the regulation of a turnpike-road, having its termini and course in one State, has been said not to come within the power of Congress to regulate commerce among the several States.

The control which Congress has assumed over navigation is absolute in its character, and recognizes no limitation beyond the discretion of the national Legislature.

There is no clause in the Constitution giving Congress power to regulate commerce upon rivers and lakes any more than upon railroads and canals. The power assumed over navigation was upon the broad principle that the power to regulate commerce involved the power to regulate the means and instruments of commerce.

It is true the one is a natural and the other an artificial channel of commerce, but that cannot affect the question of power. The power must attach to the instrument of commerce, whether natural or artificial; otherwise the great body of commerce between the States would be beyond the control of Congress.

In the case of Gray vs. The Clinton Bridge Company, reported in the American Law Register for January, 1868, Mr. Justice Miller, of the Supreme Court of the United States, says:

Navigation, however, is only one of the elements of commerce. It is an element of commerce, because it affords the means of transporting passengers and merchandise, the interchange of which is commerce itself. Any other mode of effecting this would be as much an element of commerce as navigation. When this transportation or interchange of commodities is carried on by land, it is commerce as well as when carried on by water; and the power of Congress to regulate it is as ample in the one case as in the other. The "commerce among the States" spoken of in the Constitution must, at the time that instrument was adopted, have been mainly of this character, for the steamboat, which has created our great internal commerce on the rivers, was then unknown.

In construing constitutions as forms of government alike applicable to different periods and conditions of society, resort should be had to the general principles involved, for they alone will fit changing times and conditions.

When the Constitution was formed all the States were upon the seaboard, possessing harbors and direct communication with the sea. Navigation was then the chief, and almost the only, vehicle of commerce, and the regulation of it was at once assumed by Congress without hesitation or question.

Now, through advancement in the arts and sciences, another vehicle of commerce has come into use and largely superseded navigation, but the reason and principle of the Constitution have not changed, and Congress has the same power to regulate and utilize the new as the old.

That this control should not go beyond such regulations as would be for the general interest of commerce, and should affect as little as might be the exercise by the corporations of their powers and franchises conferred by the State, and the control by each State over the railroads within it, will be readily admitted; but when a railroad corporation assumes to become the instrument of commerce between the States, and the State confers upon it powers for that purpose, there can be no objection if Congress interferes to regulate it in that character, so far as may be necessary for the common good.

The power given to regulate commerce is distinct from the taxing power given to Congress in other clauses of the Constitution, and was not intended to abridge the power of taxation in the States. Congress can make no regulation over railroads to deprive the States of their power to tax the property of railroad corporations, or to tax their citizens as the owners of shares in them as other property. The States have always taxed the property of their citizens and corporations in ships and steamboats as other private property, notwithstanding navigation is exclusively regulated by Congress.

At the time the first laws were passed upon this subject and the earliest decisions made, navigable waters were almost the only means by which commerce was carried on among the several States. There were then no railroads, and I know of no canals then extending from one State into another. Ordinary wagon-roads passing from one State to another and over which commerce was carried on to a considerable extent, needed no regulation and could not in the nature of things give rise to legislation upon the subject. It is not the peculiar means or vehicle of transportation, whether by water or by land, that determines the power of Congress to regulate it. That power exists equally upon land and water, and whatever means of transportation may be used in commerce among the several States, must be equally within the reason of the rule and subject to regulation, if it be deemed necessary.

It must be observed that the power of Congress over navigation is not confined to the rivers, lakes, and harbors, in removing obstructions, whether created by States or individuals, and keeping their channels open and free, but is equally applicable to the vessels by which they are navigated, whether those vessels are owned by private individuals, by corporations, or even by the States themselves. Steamboat companies chartered by State Legislatures, and deriving all their powers and privileges from State laws, have yet to submit to the regulations made by Congress in regard to the construction and navigation of their vessels. Whatever privileges and powers a State may confer upon a steamboat company must be taken subject to the higher power vested in Congress to regulate their exercise. This principle is so well known, that I need not refer to illustrations.

But times have greatly changed within a few years. Railroads have now become the instruments by which the greater part of commerce is carried on "among the several States." Not only is this true in regard to merchandise, but in a still larger sense in regard to passengers and travel. Railroads have to a great extent superseded not only rivers and canals, but also stages, wagons, and horses. There are few lines of railway now, that in their connections and consolidations have not become parts of lines engaged in commerce among the several States. Although railroad companies, like steamboat companies, are chartered by the several States, yet in most cases they are authorized to form consolidations, or running arrangements, with lines of railroad in other States, and to take leases of roads in distant States. Many of these corporations own and control lines of road running into or across adjoining States; and several either own or have leased thousands of miles of road, stretching far north and south, and half way across the continent. These great lines of railway, thus ramifying the Union and affecting the interest and prosperity of every State, are under the control of small boards of directors in Philadelphia, New York, or Baltimore, and chiefly ruled by a few leading minds, that really exert more power over the business affairs of the nation than governors or Presidents.

True, the railroad companies derive their power from State charters, but they must accept their franchises upon condition that if they engage in commerce among the several States they will be subject to the power of regulation which was vested in Congress by the Constitution long before any railroad charter was granted. Surely there is as much reason, and perhaps even greater necessity, for the regulation by Congress of the vast commerce upon the interstate railroads as of that which is transported upon navigable waters.

Again, Justice Miller said, in the Clinton Bridge case:

Another means of transportation, equal in importance to the steamboat, has also come into existence since the Constitution was adopted—a means by which merchandise is transported across States and kingdoms in the same vehicles in which it started. The railroad now shares with the steamboat the monopoly of the carrying trade. The one has with great benefit been the subject of salutary congressional legislation, because it is an instrument of commerce. Is there any reason why the other should not? However this question may be answered in regard to that commerce which is conducted wholly within the limits of a State, and is therefore neither foreign commerce nor commerce among the States, it seems to me that where these roads become parts of great highways of our Union, transporting a commerce which embraces many States, and destined, as some of these roads are, to become the channels through which the nations of Europe and Asia shall interchange their commodities, there can be no reason to doubt that to regulate them is to regulate commerce, both with foreign nations and among the States; and that to refuse to do this is a refusal to discharge one of the most important duties of the Federal Government. * * * For myself, I must say that I have no doubt of the right of Congress to prescribe all needful and proper regulations for the conduct of this immense traffic over any railroad which has voluntarily become part of one of those lines of interstate communication, or to authorize the creation of such roads when the purposes of interstate transportation of persons and property justify or require it.

I ought perhaps to say, in connection with this decision, that I do not read it as absolute authority, for the reason that several of the important points adverted to by Mr. Justice Miller were not before the court in that case, and it was not necessary for him to decide them; but I read his conclusions as persuasive.

Whether we consider the interests of the railroads or of the several States through which they pass, it seems equally important that they should be subject to uniform regulations, which can only be secured by national control.

If the through lines from the Atlantic to the Mississippi may be regulated in one way by Ohio, another by Indiana, and still another by Illinois, they may become the victims of unfriendly legislation, and be greatly crippled and hindered in their operations; and each State, acting for its own interests, may not consider those of other States, and may regulate against them.

If each State may regulate within its own territory those roads employed in interstate commerce, we may have reproduced some of those disorders and conflicts which existed between the States before the Constitution was formed.

While these things may happen, it is also more likely that the people of the several States, acting separately, will be less able to protect their rights and interests against the influence and power of great corporations, which by their wealth, blandishments, and natural power in the States through which they pass, will have undue influence in controlling their legislation or defeating the execution of their laws. It is hardly too much to say that the several States cannot, acting separately, regulate efficiently these great lines of transportation in which so many other States and communities are interested.

Assuming that the proposition has been established that Congress may pass laws for the supervision and regulation of railroads engaged in interstate commerce, the next question to be considered is the extent and character of the power.

As to what regulations may be necessary is left to the discretion of Congress, subject to the restrictions in the Constitution. These restrictions relate to the uniformity of the regulations, that is, that no advantage or preference shall be shown to one State over another. Uniformity and equal dealing with the people of all the States are impressed upon all the powers given to Congress, so that they be not used for the oppression of one part of the country for the upbuilding of another.

Subject to this condition, it is left to Congress to determine the character and extent of the regulations of commerce. The laying of an embargo in the form of a perpetual law in 1807 was contested as unconstitutional, upon the ground that it was the annihilation of commerce and not the regulation of it; but it was generally conceded by the best minds to be valid as a regulation of commerce, for the reason that it was left to Congress alone to fix the regulations, and their validity could not be impeached by their effects.

In respect to navigation, the power has been exercised chiefly in the following particulars:

1. To clear out obstructions from rivers and harbors, and to prevent the erection of bridges or other works by States or individuals that would materially obstruct navigation; and in some cases making rivers navigable that never had been, and constructing harbors where there had been none before.

2. To provide rules of navigation to prevent collisions and other accidents, and generally to promote safety, uniformity, and efficiency.

3. To provide rules for the construction of vessels, whether propelled by sails or by steam; with a view to safety and capacity; regulations as to weight of steam that may be carried; requiring the adoption of improvements in steam-engines, fire-apparatus, life-boats, the number of the crew, the number of passengers that may be embarked, &c.

4. Providing for the survey of the coasts, rivers, and harbors, the erection of light-houses, and establishment of life-stations upon dangerous coasts.

5. Providing for the inspection of vessels, steam-engines, and the licensing of such as are deemed fit to take part in conducting commerce.

And, in short, to make all regulations that seemed to be necessary to promote the safety, efficiency, and growth of navigation as an instrument of commerce.

The exercise of similar powers in the supervision and control of interstate railroads would give rise to a number of regulations, looking to the safety of passengers, regularity of trains, uniformity of operation, connections, inspection of tracks, bridges, locomotives, cars, &c., and in many other particulars not necessary to be mentioned, and tending to promote the safety, efficiency, and development of the railroad system, and the interests and convenience of the people.

Whether Congress possesses the power to regulate the price of freights and passenger fares upon railroads engaged in commerce among the States, is a question upon which all can form opinions as well as myself from the general principles involved. It is a power that has never been exercised in regard to navigation, but that does not disprove its existence; for the powers of government generally lie dormant until occasion calls them forth.

Cheapness and uniformity of operation, speed, convenience, promptness, and safety, all point to connected roads and through lines, and these throughout their length should be governed by uniform methods and laws. The railroad interest is so vast, and so intimately affects the business, progress, and comfort of every community, that it is of the utmost importance, not only to the people, but to the shareholders, that it be under the direction of general laws, and as far as possible blended into a harmonious whole.

The power to regulate commerce must include the power to regulate the "common carrier" by which the commerce may be conducted.

It must also include the power to regulate the public highway, so far as such regulation may be necessary, over which commerce is transported.

That railroad companies are common carriers is well settled in the law, and needs no support by argument or authority.

That railroads are public highways has been lately decided by the Supreme Court of the United States. They are as much highways as are the navigable rivers.

If we take the measure of the power of Congress over commerce "among the several States" indicated by the Supreme Court in several cases, i. e., the same power which the States had severally under the Confederation, before the Constitution was formed; over commerce with foreign nations and with each other, and which each State now possesses over commerce which is purely internal to itself, we may get a definition sufficiently tangible and accurate for our purpose. Whatever a State might have done under the Confederation, and whatever a State may do now in regard to its commerce purely internal, in the way of regulating common carriers and public highways, Congress may do in regard to common carriers and public highways employed in commerce among the States, subject to the restrictions in the Constitution requiring uniformity, and that no preference shall be given to the interests of one State over those of another.

It is a familiar principle of the law that common carriers are required to carry for all persons and for reasonable rates. Is there a doubt that the State in the one case, or Congress in the other, may determine what are reasonable rates?

If there be a doubt as to the power of the State in such a matter over a railroad company engaged in commerce purely internal, it must arise from some provision in the charter giving to the company power to regulate freights and fares, which is in the nature of a contract between the State and the company.

How far it is in the power of a Legislature to make such a contract in a matter of public concern, so intimately affecting the commerce and prosperity of a State, I will not stop to inquire; but such a contract between a State and a railroad company engaged in commerce among the several States, forming a part of a through line, is certainly not binding upon Congress, and cannot limit its power in the regulation of commerce.

The Constitution provides that no State shall pass a law impairing the obligation of contracts; but this provision, like that other which declares that no State shall make anything but gold and silver a tender in payment of debts, is binding only upon the States, and not upon Congress. A State can make no contract with a corporation which would limit or restrict Congress in the exercise of its power to regulate commerce, however binding such contract may be upon the State.

The power of a railroad company to fix the rates for freight and passengers is but the power of the State granted in the charter of its creation. A corporation is an artificial being, having no other rights, powers, or privileges except such as are conveyed in its charter; and the act of a corporation, fixing the rates for freight and passengers or in any other respect, is but an exercise of the delegated power of the State. And, as before stated, whatever franchises a State may grant to a railroad company must be accepted subject to the condition that, if it engage in interstate commerce, it is liable to be regulated by Congress.

It is not in the power of a State, whether by direct taxes or by exorbitant rates for freight and passengers passing across its territory from and to other States, to obstruct and oppress interstate commerce; and what the State may not do by direct legislation it cannot by a charter or contract empower a railroad company to do. It must be obvious that if each State by direct legislation, or indirectly through a railroad company, may fix the rates for travel and the transportation of the national commerce passing over and from it, without the power of restraint or control by Congress, the several States would be to each other in this respect as foreign nations, and the fundamental idea of the framers of the Constitution, giving to Congress the power to regulate commerce, thus be defeated; for such regulations may become hostile and even prohibitory in their character, and greatly affect or destroy commerce between the States.

If a State, by direct legislation or through a railroad company, has uncontrolled power to fix the rates for freight and passengers, heavy tribute may be levied upon the commerce of other States compelled to pass across its territory. And it is no less tribute and no less oppressive, whether done by exorbitant charges or unjust discriminations in the form of freights and fares or by direct taxes, as were formerly imposed by several of the States. It was intended by the framers of the Constitution that we should have a common country and free commerce among the States, and that no State lying across the path of commerce should be permitted to levy contributions or make unjust discriminations against it in any form. And this purpose could be accomplished only by giving to Congress the power to regulate commerce among the States.

For at least four months in the year the commerce of Wisconsin, Minnesota, Nebraska, and that over the Union Pacific Railroad from California going eastward, must pass around the southern point of Lake Michigan, in the State of Illinois; and if the State of Illinois has the power, by direct legislation or through her railroad companies, to fix the rates of travel and transportation across her territories, she possesses a vast power for the oppression of the States to the west and northwest, which is inconsistent with the nature of our Government and the equality of the several States in the Union.

A law of a State fixing a rate for the transportation of passengers and merchandise across its territory to and from other States would undoubtedly be a commercial regulation, vital in its character. It may seem improbable that legislation would be had in any State hostile to the interests of another State; but that was the precise fact under the Confederation. Transportation is such an essential element of commerce, that if a State possesses the supreme control over it, it possesses the power for its destruction.

This view is expressly sustained in the recent case of the Reading Railroad Company vs. Pennsylvania, 15 Wallace, 232, in which the court decided that a tax levied by the State of Pennsylvania upon freight taken up in the State to be carried out, or taken up out of the State to be carried in, to be paid by the company to the State, was a tax upon interstate transportation, and was void, as a violation of that provision of the Constitution which gives to Congress the power to regulate commerce among the States; that the regulation of commerce among the States necessarily included transportation as an essential element of commerce, and that any tax or regulation by a State, which placed a burden upon such transportation, was clearly unconstitutional.

Each State may regulate commerce which is purely internal to itself without interference by Congress, and may, doubtless, in the absence of congressional legislation, make regulations for all commerce that passes across or over any part of its territory; provided such regulations do not impose burdens upon interstate commerce, make no unjust discriminations, and are in their nature equitable and conducive to its safety, growth, and prosperity; but all such regulations as affect interstate commerce, however meritorious in their character or intention, must yield to the legislation of Congress.

It is a field of jurisdiction the States may occupy in the absence of congressional legislation, subject to the conditions I have named. I am aware that Mr. Justice Story, in his Commentaries, expresses the opinion that the power in Congress to regulate commerce among the States is exclusive, and cannot be exercised by the States even in the absence of congressional legislation; and that Chief Justice Marshall, in Gibbons vs. Ogden, intimates that as the better doctrine; but he expressly said that he did not decide it, as the question was not before the court. But other eminent members of the court, in the Passenger cases, held that the power was not exclusive, and might be exercised by the States in the absence of legislation by Congress; and this view, I think, is supported by the greater weight of argument, and seems to me to be necessary when we consider the complicated relations between that commerce purely internal to a State and the commerce among the several States; and that the instruments of this commerce, such as railroads, are created under State laws, and owe their existence to them.

The power of a railroad company to fix the rates for freight and passengers is but the power of the State granted in the charter of its creation, and in the absence of restraining clauses in the charter, or legislation by the State or by Congress, may be exercised by the company at its discretion, except so far as its action may be modified or controlled by the principle of the common law, that common carriers must transport for reasonable rates. Natural persons, acting as common carriers, are subject to this principle of the common law; and railroad corporations, however general their powers, it would seem, should have no higher authority in this respect than natural persons. But the principle of the common law would be ineffectual to restrain legislation by a State in fixing rates and creating burdensome regulations, or in granting specific powers to a railroad company for that purpose, and they can only be prevented by the action of Congress, so far as such rates and regulations may affect commerce among the States.

THE CURRENCY—SPECIE PAYMENTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business of yesterday is now before the Senate, being the resolution reported by the Committee on Finance, and the question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. FERRY.] Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I understood the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] desired to speak on this subject. He is now in his seat, and he will speak for himself.

Mr. BAYARD. Is it proposed to take the question upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan to the resolution of the Committee on Finance?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the pending question.

Mr. BAYARD. It is unfortunate, sir, that there has been a misunderstanding among Senators with regard to the progress of debate on this very important measure. I had supposed that the honorable Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON,] and the honorable Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS,] both desired to be heard on this subject; and although I made the statement three days ago, when the question was postponed until to-day, that I wished to speak, I did it in the interest of those gentlemen even more than in my own, and expected that to-day the two Senators I have designated would have been prepared to submit their views to the Senate; and thinking so, I proposed to postpone my own remarks upon the subject until they should have gotten through.

I have stated these facts briefly to my honorable friend, the chairman of the Committee on Finance; and I trust there will be no hesitancy on the part of the Senate in allowing this question to pass over until Thursday, understanding that the Senator who now occupies the chair desires to speak upon a different subject, the Louisiana matter, to-morrow. I therefore ask that this subject of finance may lie over until Thursday morning, and at the expiration of the morning hour on that day I shall ask the favor of a hearing of the Senate on the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senate will pardon a remark from the Chair, I fear I shall not be able to speak to-morrow on the Louisiana matter; and if it is equally agreeable to the Senator from Delaware that he should proceed to-morrow on the subject of finance, and give me Thursday on the other question, it would be a great accommodation to me.

Mr. BAYARD. I will endeavor to make my convenience, then, accord with that arrangement.

Mr. SHERMAN. All that I desire is to have, during this week, without forcing the debate, or hurrying any one, a vote on the resolution that is pending, and any amendments that may be offered to the pending resolution. I feel that we should not be doing justice to our constituents to keep this matter longer before the Senate impeding other business; and therefore I appeal to all Senators who desire to participate in the debate to prepare themselves, so that we may close the matter this week. As a matter of course, I cannot resist the motion made by the Senator from Delaware. There has been a misunderstanding in regard to the debate to-day, and I suppose the only way is to let it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. BAYARD. I submit the motion that this subject be postponed until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware moves that the further consideration of the pending resolution be postponed until to-morrow at one o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

CIVIL-RIGHTS BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no special order before the Senate. The Secretary will report the first bill on the Calendar.

The CHIEF CLERK. The first bill on the Calendar is the bill (S. No. 1) supplementary to an act entitled "An act to protect all citizens of the United States in their civil rights, and to furnish the means for their vindication," passed April 9, 1866.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and subject to amendment. If no amendment be offered, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. BOREMAN. I should like to have the bill read, so that we may see what is in it.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That no citizen of the United States shall, by reason of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, be excepted or excluded from the full and equal enjoyment of any accommodation, advantage, facility, or privilege furnished by innkeepers; by common carriers, whether on land or water; by licensed owners, managers, or lessees of theaters or other places of public amusement; by trustees, commissioners, superintendents, teachers, and other officers of common schools and public institutions of learning, the same being supported by moneys derived from general taxation or authorized by law; also of cemetery associations and benevolent associations supported or authorized in the same way: Provided, That private schools, cemeteries, and institutions of learning established exclusively for white or colored persons, and maintained respectively by voluntary contributions, shall remain according to the terms of the original establishment.

SEC. 2. That any person violating any of the provisions of the foregoing section, or aiding in their violation, or inciting thereto, shall, for every such offense, forfeit and pay the sum of $500 to the person aggrieved thereby, to be recovered in an action on the case, with full costs; and shall also, for every such offense, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not less than $500 nor more than $1,000, or shall be imprisoned not less than thirty days nor more than one year: Provided, That the party aggrieved shall not recover more than one penalty; and when the offense is a refusal of burial, the penalty may be recovered by the heirs at law of the person whose body has been refused burial.

SEC. 3. That the same jurisdiction and powers are hereby conferred and the same duties enjoined upon the courts and officers of the United States in the execution of this act as are conferred and enjoined upon such courts and officers in sections 3, 4, 5, 7, and 10 of an act entitled "An act to protect all persons in the United States in their civil rights, and to furnish the means of their vindication," passed April 9, 1866, and these sections are hereby made a part of this act; and any of the aforesaid officers failing to institute and prosecute such proceedings herein required shall, for every such offense, forfeit and pay the sum of $500 to the person aggrieved thereby, to be recovered by an action on the case, with full costs; and shall, on conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and be fined not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000.

SEC. 4. That no citizen possessing all other qualifications which are or may be prescribed by law shall be disqualified for service as juror in any court, national or State, by reason of race, color, or previous condition of servitude; and any officer or other persons charged with any duty in the selection or summoning of jurors who shall exclude or fail to summon any citizen for the reason above named shall, on conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and be fined not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000.

SEC. 5. That every discrimination against any citizen on account of color by the use of the word "white," or any other term in any law, statute, ordinance, or regulation, national or State, is hereby repealed and annulled.

Mr. HOWE obtained the floor.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. I rose to make the motion which I indicated some time ago, that this bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. It has never been referred, I believe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. HOWE. The Senator will have an opportunity to make that motion in one moment.

I was under a misapprehension about this bill. It was my impression that the bill had been referred to a committee. I see it has not been. I shall not submit such a motion myself. I do not care myself to have it referred. I rose to say that it was my purpose to submit some remarks upon the general question involved in this bill whenever the Senate took up the bill for consideration. I am not prepared to make those remarks this morning, and I do not think them of sufficient importance to delay the consideration of the bill, so that I shall not ask any postponement myself on that account. If I had supposed that the debate on the question of finance was to be postponed I would have hurried my preparation.

I make these remarks now by way of apology, for in view of a recent adjudication which is supposed to have a material bearing upon the bill, and which I do not think to be the case myself, I have thought I might indulge myself in some remarks upon the constitutionality of this proposed law. If, however, the Senate is prepared to vote on the bill, I am myself, and shall ask no postponement to accommodate me.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. Mr. President, when this bill was before the Senate on a former occasion, at the commencement of the present session, the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary [Mr. EDMUNDS] expressed a wish that the bill should be referred to that committee, suggesting at the same time some reasons for such reference, growing out of recent action of the courts. On a subsequent occasion the bill again came before the Senate, and the chairman of that committee being then absent, I was about to move a reference to that committee, but for some reason, I have forgotten what, it passed over and the motion was not made. I make the motion now that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, which will leave the whole matter open for discussion if anybody desires to discuss it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut moves that this bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. And on that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, there is a very good reason, a very strong reason, why this bill should not be referred to the committee, and it is found in the history of the bill. I have in my hand a memorandum, which has been kindly prepared for me at the desk, disclosing details which the Senate ought to bear in mind before they vote.

By the Journals of the Senate it appears that as long ago as May 13, 1870—

MR. SUMNER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to bring in a bill supplementary to an act entitled "An act to protect all persons in the United States in their civil rights and furnish the means for their vindication," passed April 9, 1866; which was read the first and second times by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

The next appearance of the bill is July 7, of that year, when, according to the Journal, "Mr. Trumbull, from the Committee on the Judiciary," with a large number of other bills reported this to the Senate, "with a recommendation that they ought not to pass." The record says that—

The Senate proceeded to consider the said bills as in Committee of the Whole; and no amendment being made, they were reported to the Senate.

On motion of Mr. Trumbull,

Resolved, That the said bills be postponed indefinitely.

You will observe, sir, the bill was treated in the lump at the close of the session, and you have here the report of the very committee to which it is now proposed to refer it.

The next appearance of the bill is January 20, 1871, and the entry is as follows:

Mr. SUMNER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to bring in a bill supplementary to an act entitled "An act to protect all persons in the United States in their civil rights, and furnish the means for their vindication," passed April 9, 1866; which was read the first and second times by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

February 15, 1871, "Mr. Trumbull, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill, * * * reported it without amendment, and that it ought not to pass." There was no action of the Senate at the time, for you will bear in mind the lateness of the day in the session; and Senators cannot have forgotten the pressure of business at that time. That was sufficient reason against its consideration. Indeed, with all the assiduity that I could command, I was not able to obtain a hearing for it.

Then came the first session of the Forty-second Congress, beginning March 4, 1871. Upon the Journal it appears, March 9, 1871, "Mr. SUMNER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to bring in" this same bill; "which was read the first and second times by unanimous consent, and ordered to lie on the table and be printed."

In introducing the bill this third time I stated that it had already been to the Judiciary Committee twice before; that it was to be presumed that they had carefully considered it; that they had reported it adversely; that they had not reported any amendment; that I did not think it advisable now to refer the bill to a committee that had twice recorded an adverse judgment; that the bill was well known to Senators; that it had been before the Senate a long time; and that under the circumstances I thought I should be justified in asking that it take its place on the Calendar and be printed. The order was made, and it held its place on the Calendar.

Shortly afterward a measure of general amnesty, it will be remembered, passed the House of Representatives and came to this Chamber. Then it was that I deemed it my duty to move this bill as an amendment, and you will remember the extended discussion that ensued; how justice to the African race was contrasted with generosity to those who had struck at the life of the Republic; and it was insisted that our first duty was justice. The debate was protracted. Senators cannot have forgotten it; and more than once votes were had upon the pending amendment. I think twice it was carried by the casting vote of the Vice-President. Certainly it was attached to the bill for general amnesty, and the debate reached over weeks, during which time the supplementary civil-rights bill, as it came to be called, underwent amendment. It was modified in various particulars, in none of great importance, in none of principle, but verbally; also in the penalties and in the machinery; but the bill now stands, in principle and in substance, as it was when originally introduced. So far as it is changed, it is a change reached by debate in this Chamber. The Senate itself has been a Committee of the Whole sitting on this bill, superseding thereby the labors of any special committee.

Why, then, after two references to the Judiciary Committee should we have a third? Is it for delay? Is it in the hope of any light on this important subject which Senators have not already? Why, then, the reference? I can see no considerable or sufficient object except one that we are compelled to recognize in this Chamber; can it be a mode of opposition by interposing time, delay?

Now, sir, the bill is on the Calendar No. 1. It should have been the first acted upon this session; and if it was not acted upon first there is no blame on me, for I tried to have you act upon it on one of the earliest days of this session, but I was resisted here by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. FERRY] and the Senator from Maine, [Mr. MORRILL;] the Senator from Connecticut insisting then as now that the bill should go to a committee. Now, sir, I appeal to the Senate to take this important measure in its own hands at once and directly.

What is the use of a committee? It is as eyes and ears to the Senate. How often do we repeat that saying? But who wants eyes and ears for the appreciation of this measure? Its character is manifest; its justice is confessed; it is in harmony with all that has been done to carry out the great results of the war; it is in harmony with the Declaration of Independence and with the grand history of the Republic; it is in harmony with the constitutional amendments, and it is indeed necessary in order to their full enjoyment. The necessity is manifest every day in the outrages to which the colored race are exposed, not only in travel and at hotels, but still more in the children of their homes who are shut out from those schools where they ought to receive practically, as well as by lesson, the great duty of equality. The bill is an urgent necessity. There ought to be no delay. There should not be the postponement of a committee, for the committee is unnecessary. The committee has already sat upon it once, twice; why a third time?

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. Mr. President, I have no desire whatever to discuss, upon this motion for reference, the bill itself. At former sessions of the Senate I have performed that duty as fully as I think it necessary for me to do. As I remarked when I was up before, when at the commencement of this session the bill was introduced, a reference to the Judiciary Committee was sought by the chairman of that committee for the purpose of perfecting the bill, and, as I understood him, in deference to certain adjudications of the courts.

The Senator from Massachusetts asks why, after the Judiciary Committee at former sessions have considered this bill, should it be referred again to that committee at the present session? The reason is manifest in the judicial history of the country since those former sessions; for since the bill has been considered by the Judiciary Committee there have been decisions both in the State courts and in the Supreme Court of the United States which might modify materially the views of Senators, and might incline that committee materially to alter the bill before they report it, should they report it favorably; or might modify their former views, which were adverse to the bill. It is because the judicial decisions have occurred since the Judiciary Committee have investigated this bill that I have thought it ought to be referred at the present time.

Sir, I care nothing for delay about this matter. I am glad that the bill is reached on the Calendar now. I believe that I have done all my duty requires me to do, holding the constitutional views that I do in regard to the propriety of the passage of this bill by Congress. The subject-matter is, in my judgment, a matter of State police, and the intervention of the Federal Government in the mode prescribed by this bill will be, in my judgment, a flagrant violation of the Constitution of the United States; and, so long as I am a Senator of the United States, I will not sit quietly in my seat and allow the Constitution, in my judgment, to be violated without at least the preliminary examination of a committee of this body.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am sure that my honorable friend from Massachusetts does not mean to appropriate to himself all the love of human rights that exists in this body; and I am a little sorry that he has said, with a plain intimation that he means what he says in its fullest sense, that the idea of referring this bill to a committee is an idea of opposition. I beg my honorable friend from Massachusetts to understand that the people whom I represent have, if he will take the whole body of them together, been much longer in favor of what we in general call human rights than the people of Massachusetts have been; and that they do not yield to the people of Massachusetts or to their representatives the right to question their fidelity to the equal rights of national citizenship merely because they are opposed to undertaking to do a thing by such generalities and such irregular methods of legislation as to make it totally ineffectual when it is brought to trial in the courts. The kind of equality that the people of Vermont are for is that which is an effectual equality, one which the courts are bound to respect, basing their decisions upon statutes that are so drawn within the Constitution that they will bear investigation and will stand criticism. That is our position; and I had supposed that the object of committees in this body and in every other was that when measures of legislation like this are proposed, which especially open new fields and new disputes under new fundamental provisions of the Constitution, they ought to undergo, in the very interest in which they are presented, the most careful criticism and the most searching investigation, in order that when they come to be applied to the people they may not prove to be barren of results and be a shame in the courts of justice.

We have had some experience of this kind under these amendments. We have framed civil-rights laws. The first one that passed this body was passed under the stress of political circumstances, under the heat of a somewhat passionate debate, and over the veto of a somewhat passionate message from the President of the United States; and the result was, that in large particulars it required immediate amendment in order that it might meet the questions which were raised under it in such a way as to be of the least aid to the citizen in asserting his rights. So of the voting bill under the fifteenth amendment; so of every bill (for why should I enumerate?) which arises under fresh provisions of the Constitution which have yet to be construed and applied.

Now, if my honorable friend will give me the credit of being candid, my simple motive in asking that this bill should go to the Committee on the Judiciary—I do not care; it may go to the Committee on Privileges and Elections if the Senate prefers that; but to some committee authorized to deal with the question as a practical one—was that it might be applied in the courts of justice under those rules which are made for the protection of human rights, not merely in the form that this bill provides for them, but that no man should be condemned except according to law and under constitutional laws, and therefore that this bill might be thus examined and criticised, and, so far as it should be found to be consonant with the principles of the liberalized Constitution, that I believe in as much as my friend does, so far it should be made effectual in its machinery, that no reluctant judge might find himself excused from responsibility for not carrying it out upon the ground that there was difficulty in its machinery or in its details.

That was my motive, and the Judiciary Committee, in my judgment, have had the same motive in treating these bills before. I believe that committee has been in favor of carrying out to the largest extent the provisions of the Constitution of the United States as lately amended. They have felt as deeply as my honorable friend feels the love of liberty and the love of justice; but they have felt that a love of liberty and a love of justice which only spends itself in words here and fails in the courts is not the kind of love for liberty and justice that the people of the United States most demand. What they wish for is protection; what they wish for is a practical right that shall be asserted under the law and through the law, and from which no man can escape.

Mr. HOWE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question for information?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. I do not doubt the sincerity of the Committee on the Judiciary at the present time, or at any former time; but listening to the record which was read here just now, if I remember it correctly, it recites that this bill, or a similar bill, has twice been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and has twice been reported back without amendment, and adversely. If that is the true history of the case, it indicates to my mind not only that the Committee on the Judiciary, as it had been constituted, were opposed to the passage of this bill, but that they were of the opinion that no bill on the subject should pass.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Well, Mr. President, that is not the true history of the case. I do not remember this particular bill; I did not know it was coming up now, and therefore I am not apprised of the immediate details about this particular bill; but I feel rather safe in saying that this particular bill, or one in the same terms, has not been before the Judiciary Committee as it is at present constituted. There was a time, in the good old days of five or six years ago, when the Judiciary Committee was somewhat differently constituted, and when its chairman, now not a member of the Senate, who has since stood upon the same platform of political ideas that my friend from Massachusetts does, had charge of the affairs of that committee, that a bill on this subject was reported against in the Judiciary Committee; but that is not the fault of the present committee. Since the committee has been organized as it is now this subject—I do not remember this particular bill by name—but the subject of civil rights, and the subject of civil rights as opened by this bill, has been under consideration by that committee, and it has been acted upon in favor of the rights of the citizen under the Constitution, and in favor of further legislation on the subject, such as a majority of the committee thought to be constitutional, but not in favor of the precise provisions of this bill, because a majority of the committee believed them susceptible of improvement; and although I have not looked it over it is so long I cannot tell myself—my faith is so strong that my intellectual beliefs are sometimes carried a little beyond what they ought to be, but I think it rather safe to say that I myself could not vote for this bill as it stands; and yet I really believe that I possess as much zeal on the subject and as much faith in a general way, as my friend from Massachusetts does.

Our object, therefore, has been, Mr. President, to have the Senate of the United States pass every bill that can be constitutionally passed, perfect in machinery, perfect in detail, to enforce the provisions of the new amendments of the Constitution in favor of what are called "equal rights."

I am in favor of what are called "equal rights," and if we have felt compelled to find in some instance or in some line of some of these bills that there was no warrant in the Constitution for it, is it to be said that we are opposed to legislation in favor of equal rights, because we do not quite agree on some one point with my learned friend from Massachusetts? Is he, who is so much in favor of equal rights, indisposed to allow us the same privilege of intellectual belief and the same fervency of heart for liberty as he claims for himself? If so, that is not the kind of equal rights that I am for.

I am for giving my friend from Massachusetts the full benefit of what he claims, that his zeal is strong, and that his heart is strong, and his head strong, in the proposal of these bills; but it is just possible—I know it is a very remote possibility, but it is just possible—that a majority of his brother Senators might think that in some one respect he was too strong in his legislation, or so strong as to make his legislation absolutely weak in the fact that when he was enabled by the Constitution to do something, he had endeavored to do so much that even his little something came to no result at all. There is the difficulty.

I do not propose, Mr. President, now to open the discussion upon the general constitutionality of this bill, or of any particular part of it. I only say that it deserves, as every other important measure deserves, and particularly these of new legislation under new provisions of the Constitution, the careful consideration of an honest and intelligent committee. If the Judiciary Committee is not that committee, then let it be sent to some other.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, on looking at the statutes I find two laws on this general subject, the one in regard to civil rights, passed in 1866, and the other in 1870, providing for protecting citizens in the right to vote, and which also re-enacts the civil-rights bill. Both of these laws were prepared by the Judiciary Committee. Various bills were referred to that committee, and they were considered there, and reported, and passed by the Senate. The original civil-rights bill was passed before the adoption of the fourteenth amendment—passed on the 9th of April, 1866—and I doubt not that the questions which were raised in regard to its constitutionality caused its re-enactment in 1870; in fact I know it to be so. The first section of that act of 1866 provides—

> That all persons born in the United States and not subject to any foreign power, (excluding Indians not taxed,) are hereby declared to be citizens of the United States; and such citizens, of every race and color, without regard to any previous condition of slavery or involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall have the same right in every State and Territory in the United States, to make and enforce contracts, to sue, be parties, and give evidence, to inherit, purchase, lease, sell, hold, and convey real and personal property, and to full and equal benefit of all laws and proceedings for the security of person and property, as is enjoyed by white citizens, and shall be subject to like punishment, pains, and penalties, and to none other, any law, statute, ordinance, regulation, or custom, to the contrary notwithstanding.

After this declaration the act goes on to provide penalties and machinery for their enforcement. There was much discussion as to the constitutionality of the act. The fourteenth amendment followed; and after the adoption of that amendment, and after the adoption also of the fifteenth amendment, there was an act passed, in 1870, three sections of which were devoted to this proposition of civil rights. It extended the civil-rights bill to all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States, whether born within the United States or not, applying the same principle of personal protection to all persons within the limits of the United States, wherever born, so as to protect a class that were supposed to be, and in fact were, legislated against in this country—the Chinese. It abrogated some laws of California which levied discriminating taxes upon them and prevented them from having a standing in court. The sixteenth section extended the civil-rights bill to them, and in fact to all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States, whether they were natives or foreigners. The seventeenth section provided for the enforcement of it, and adopted the same machinery and penalties that were in the original civil-rights bill. The eighteenth section enacts that—

> An act to protect all persons in the United States in their civil rights and furnish the means of their vindication, passed April 9, 1866, is hereby re-enacted, and sections 16 and 17 thereof shall be enforced according to the provisions of this act.

The bill under consideration seeks to supplement and extend the provisions of the laws to which I have referred. It is a criminal law. Criminal laws must be certain and be enforced with exactness. It does seem to me, in view of the amount of legislation we have on the subject, that a bill of this kind, going into details and supplementing existing laws, and a statute criminal in its character, should be thoroughly examined by the Judiciary Committee. The prior legislation on this subject has all come from that committee—legislation that I believe now has received the general approval of the country, and it does seem to me that there is nothing in the composition of that committee which would deny to it the ordinary prerogative of examining this bill and so framing it as to make it certain in its operation within the purview of the Constitution, and make it a law that can accomplish the exact end aimed at. There is no immediate excitement about it; no immediate hurry about it; it is an amendment to existing laws on this subject which are already quite broad. It is true, the courts have differed to some extent about them, but generally they have given them a fair and liberal construction; and if the law is to be extended and supplemented in this regard, it is better for all concerned, it is the orderly way of doing it, to have it considered by the Judiciary Committee, which is composed of as able and conscientious members as the Senate possesses, and is able to give us a law which will be constitutional, which will accomplish the purpose, and for which we can all vote, if further legislation be necessary. I am in favor of the reference. I believe a criminal law in all cases where we pass criminal laws ought to be examined by the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator from Nevada has made a speech which is founded on oblivion of the past. The bill has been examined by the Judiciary Committee, and twice reported by them adversely without amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. When was the last report?

Mr. SUMNER. February 15, 1871.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That was in the time of Trumbull.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator says "that was in the time of Trumbull;" but it was reported adversely by the Judiciary Committee, of which my learned friend was a distinguished member, I think. I cannot mistake; he must have been on the committee, a party to its report; and there was from him no minority voice, no opposition on this floor to the report of the chairman. He allowed the chairman to speak for the committee, including himself.

But the Senator from Nevada, oblivious of this history, insists upon another reference. He wishes to put this bill through another dance. For what purpose? He has read the existing statute to which this is supplementary, and he thinks that the committee ought to consider the aptitude of this bill to carry out the declared purpose. Why, sir, I agree with him that such aptitude ought to exist; but do not forget the bill has been before the Senate now nearly four years. Nearly four years has this bill, substantially as at this moment, been before the Senate, and twice before the Judiciary Committee.

Now, sir, let us ascend from words to things. Why make another reference? Is it that it may find verbal place on your record that this bill was duly referred and duly reported? That is the only reason I can imagine, for the bill in its substance is well known to every Senator, and, I may add, is well known to every lawyer in the country. It has been discussed here again and again, day after day, and has been modified after discussion; and you now have the result of all the discussion and the modification. It is well known. It is familiar to the country. It has received the approbation of those who are most interested in it. It has been prayed for by petitioners without number. It has been commended at public meetings with an earnestness and an enthusiasm almost without parallel.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. SUMNER. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask my friend, the Senator from Massachusetts, as he is now speaking of the character of the bill, which I did not care to refer to particularly, where the jury is summoned, and a man should happen to be convicted of murder or any other crime under the State law, would it or not set aside the verdict?

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator will pardon me. I had not intended to touch this branch of the debate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I merely wish to ask him what he understands to be the character of the fourth section, supposing we pass it just as it stands, and supposing a jury happens to be summoned contrary to the provisions of the fourth section, but in accordance with the law of the State.

Mr. SUMNER. The effect of the violation of the law in that respect need not be considered. It is sufficient that this section provides a penalty against those who violate the law; such is its simple object.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Ah! But let me ask my friend, does it not also provide what shall constitute a lawful jury?

Mr. SUMNER. Very well; and should it not so provide?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well; but my question is, what would be the effect upon the trial of an indictment found by a grand jury not composed in conformity to this section?

Mr. SUMNER. I will not——

Mr. HOWE. It would be cause for challenge to the array.

Mr. SUMNER. I will not presume to pronounce an opinion on that question. It is sufficient for me that the section is clear and explicit in imposing a penalty upon the party making the exclusion, and that is all the bill proposes. The other consequences may be, will be, for the determination of the courts. The question belongs to them; I doubt if it belongs to us. But the bill is open to amendment. Let the Senator move such as he thinks the case requires. I shall welcome it.

When the Senator interrupted me I was about to address myself to him; for I should not have risen this time but for the remarks which he made. I know not, sir, why my position on this question should justify the personalities which the Senator from Vermont considers so essential to debate. I certainly made no allusion to him, nor do I claim anything for myself. I am an humble worker in this Chamber, and in this cause I have been laborious for years; but not on that account do I claim anything; nor do I make any pretense. I know not why the Senator should, with personality of manner and allusion, undertake to taunt me for the position that I occupy. Do I deserve it? I represent humbly the sentiments of the people of Massachusetts, who have sent me here now for many years. Always loyal to these sentiments I hope to be, even though it brings upon me the displeasure of the Senator. Sir, I am anxious to harmonize with that Senator. I know, too, his loyalty to this cause—I do not doubt it; but I now appeal to that Senator to unite with me in speeding this great measure. Let him join sincerely, with his large intelligence, to hasten this bill before the Senate and make it the law of the land; so would he become a benefactor to a much-oppressed people.

Possibly he has his doubts in regard to the jury provision. I know other lawyers have expressed doubts before; and from the inquiry that he made a moment ago it is perhaps fair to infer that those doubts haunt his mind. To that I simply answer, happily they do not haunt mine. I know the Constitution of my country, and I know that under that Constitution, unless my judgment fails entirely, the provision with reference to juries is absolutely valid and constitutional. I challenge the discussion. Let the Senator make his objections. The original civil-rights bill, which passed over the veto of the President, solemnly declares that no evidence shall be excluded from any court of justice, national or State, on account of color. The nation has undertaken to regulate the testimony not only in its own courts but in State courts; and will any one pretend that it may not regulate the jury in State courts, when it may regulate the testimony in State courts? Why, sir, there is nothing in the Constitution touching testimony, but there are no less than three distinct provisions relating to trial by jury; and among other terms employed is "an impartial jury," which is among the privileges and immunities of the citizen. And is it wrong for Congress, in the plenitude of its powers, anxious to do justice to all, to declare that there shall be an impartial jury in all tribunals, whether national or State, without regard to color? Having begun by regulating the testimony, where is the argument which is to prevent us from regulating the jury? I need not remind my excellent friend that originally the witnesses and the jury were almost one and the same.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They were precisely the same.

Mr. SUMNER. Very well; so much the better; and the Senator knows that there is a phrase handed down to us from English courts by which we are reminded constantly of the "witness-box" and the "jury-box." So closely were they together, that they come under a common nomenclature. Now I insist that they shall come under a common safeguard. We have already provided that there shall be no exclusion in testimony on account of color. We must also provide that there shall be no exclusion from the jury on account of color; and until that provision is made by supreme national law, not to be set aside, justice is not fully done.

But, sir, I had no intention to discuss the character of this bill, and I have only been led into it by the allusion of the Senator, who, holding the bill in his hand, signalizes that section as open to criticism. Let him proceed with his criticism. But then I hope for better things. I hope my friend, instead of criticism, will give us that generous support which so well becomes him. He sees full well that until this great question is completely settled the results of the war are not all secured, nor is this delicate and sensitive subject banished from these Halls. Sir, my desire—the darling desire, if I may say so, of my soul—at this moment is to close forever this great question, so that it shall never again intrude into these Chambers; so that hereafter in all our legislation there shall be no such word as "black" or "white," but that we shall speak only of citizens and of men. Is not that an aspiration worthy of a Senator? Is such an aspiration any ground for taunt from the Senator of Vermont? Will he not, too, join in the aspiration and the endeavor to bring about that beneficent triumph? Let this be omitted now, let any part of this bill be dropped out now, and you leave the question for another Congress, to be pursued by other petitions, to be pressed by other Senators and Representatives; for so long as injustice remains without redress, so long will there be men to petition, and so long, I trust, will there be Senators and Representatives to demand a remedy. I ask for all now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, my first mission now is to get myself out of a quarrel with my honorable friend from Massachusetts. I was not aware that I was particularly personal to the Senator from Massachusetts, and certainly not in a way to offend him. I alluded to a public and well-known fact, of which I supposed he was not ashamed, and I did it in reply to what appeared to me to be an allegation or an insinuation—though I do not use that term in any offensive sense—and implication that he intended the Senate to draw from the fact that the Judiciary Committee, when it was differently composed from what it is now, and had at its head a late political ally of his own, had been guilty of a covert opposition to this bill in getting it referred there, and of an open opposition by reporting against it upon principle. Now, my point was to relieve the Judiciary Committee, even in those old times, from any accusation or implication, to be derived from their action, that they were hostile to the principle of the bill, and I thought if I showed that the chairman of that committee and my honorable friend stood upon the same political grounds, the chief object of such an assertion as he made would be answered, and it would not be believed, even by himself, that there could have been any unfaithfulness to the principles of liberty, any failure of a desire to uphold the Constitution of the United States as it now is, from a committee composed as that was, its distinguished leader and head standing upon the same ground as my honorable friend. If there was anything personal in that, it was due to the observation of my friend from Massachusetts, and not to me.

Mr. SUMNER. May I interrupt my friend there?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator cannot have forgotten the numerous occasions on which I differed on this floor with Mr. Trumbull on that very question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I know it.

Mr. SUMNER. More than once I met him in debate, more than once by protest, and in every possible way in which one Senator could bear his testimony to another.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is perfectly true, Mr. President; and in reply to that I have to say that I find, notwithstanding, that that was merely a misunderstanding of their respective positions; and since this bill has been last reported from the Judiciary Committee they have clasped hands on a common political platform which would send this bill into the waste-basket in five months.

I do not allude to this to taunt my honorable friend. I do not taunt him. I do not suppose there is any ground for taunting him or anybody about it. It was a thing that both those gentlemen had a perfect right to do. I only referred to it, as I say, to redeem the Judiciary Committee, even in its ancient organization, from the charge that it had acted with unfairness or with hostility to the principle contained in the fourteenth amendment. No doubt Judge Trumbull saw, as I think any Senator who has been bred to the practice as well as the theory of the law would see, on looking at the fourth section of this bill in particular—I have not had time to look at the others—that if you were to pass that as it stands as a law, you would furnish a cause for challenge to the array of every grand jury in the country where the laws of the State do not harmonize with the laws of Congress; and even if it turned out that this fourth section were constitutional, there being no provision in the State law for drawing a grand jury otherwise than according to its forms, and there being no provision in the law for carrying out its principles in respect to calling a grand jury to try crimes, you would have cut off both the hands of justice in protecting the very people you desire to defend. I am not in favor of legislation of that kind.

Let me tell my honorable friend, on the other hand, that I agree with him, and I have voted with him and upon his side in support of the jury clause in this bill, so far as the right to sit upon a jury goes; but that right must not only be defended by a penalty imposed on people who deny it, but it must be defended affirmatively for the protection of the community who are to be benefited by it. I am sure my friend will agree with me in that. The innocent man who is put upon trial for his life must not only have his life depend upon a penalty against some officer who has not called a proper jury, but he must have it depend upon the fact that a proper jury is called composed in conformity to law, in order that they may acquit him. It is no comfort to a man to be hanged by a jury which is not composed as the law and Constitution require it to be composed, supposing this to be constitutional, and then to be told afterward that the law had omitted the necessary machinery to make that right effectual. That is my point. I beg my honorable friend not to understand me as saying that I do not believe that the fourteenth amendment allows Congress to require that colored men shall sit upon juries. I do believe so; and I have made that manifestation before this time, even in connection with these discussions, although I cannot allude to discussions which have taken place in committee.

Now, then, my friend again says I am personal to him. Let him excuse me for saying that it comes not with the best of grace from my honorable friend, who has certainly said that which every Senator who heard him must have understood him to mean, that the committee, as now composed, was manifesting its opposition to the principles and the practice of this bill by the fact that it desired to have the bill referred; that it was a sly, an indirect, and parliamentary method of putting it to death. I think that is much more personal than for me to allude to a great public fact, that took place before the eyes, if not of admiring nations, at least of those who were very curious and interested in the circumstance of the union of parties within the last two or three years; and that was all of my allusion. So if I have, in some degree, referred to personal history, or rather to political history, in respect to this measure, it has been because I was obliged to do so in order to defend the character and the fair-dealing of the committee of which I have the honor to be the chairman, not only now but in the times when other gentlemen, who are not here now to speak for themselves, were chairmen also. It was not in hostility to the bill. The honorable Senator had no right, I submit to him, to say that the motion, made I believe by myself, to refer this bill to the Judiciary Committee, was made in hostility to it. I stated at the time that it was not made in hostility to it; that it was made because I was in favor of the leading principles which the bill refers to, and which are, many of them, defended by the amendments of the Constitution, in my opinion; but that they should be so carried into laws that they would work effectual benefit to the people they mean to protect, instead of turning out to be mere blinds and snares, which would defeat the very justice that we desired to uphold for them.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I have uniformly voted in favor of a civil-rights bill, and therefore I do not subject myself to any criticism when I say that I intend to vote to refer this bill to the Committee on the Judiciary. The Senator from Massachusetts will remember that the bill which he introduced at a former session was in the Senate changed most materially; that there were some six or eight amendments which he was so well satisfied should be made to the bill that he accepted them, and probably after his attention was drawn to those defects the Senator himself would not have voted for the bill without the amendments, for they were essential amendments to protect the rights of the colored people. I could specify many of them, but it is not necessary.

Now, it does seem to me, in looking at this bill, that there are two or three very serious defects in it. The bill provides, for instance, that colored people shall have the right of burial in all public cemeteries—a very proper provision; but then it goes on to provide that any person violating this law shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and punished by fine and imprisonment. Are we to imprison all the trustees of a public cemetery for having violated that law?

Again, it provides in reference to jurors, and says that any officer who shall violate the provision in reference to jurors shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and be punished by fine, which would subject our judges in some of the Federal courts to indictment while discharging their duty on the bench, instead of being subject to impeachment, as they are by the Constitution.

Now, I would say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I think he has it in his power to take from every opponent of the bill any apology, reason, or excuse for opposing it by acquiescing with the other friends of the measure in its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary. I think that we can give the Senator the assurance that a fortnight will not pass without the bill being reported.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator is a member of the Judiciary Committee, I believe?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SUMNER. I accept his assurance and consent to the reference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, in the chair.) The question is on the reference of the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to say, as one member of that committee, that I do not give any such assurance. I wish to know whether the Senate is willing to refer this bill to the Judiciary Committee for its consideration with the promptness that its business will allow. Had it been referred upon my motion when it was introduced, I think it safe to say it would have been reported long ago.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. That is equally satisfactory.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In the present state of my health I do not propose to promise that it shall be reported in two weeks from this day.

Mr. HOWE. I rise simply to ask the Senator from Vermont if he submitted such a motion?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did when the bill was introduced.

Mr. HOWE. The motion that is pending now, I think, is a motion submitted by the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. FERRY,] and submitted on this day for the first time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think I made the motion when the bill was first introduced.

Mr. SUMNER. The bill was introduced before the committees were organized; and the Senator gave notice of such a motion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now pending is upon the motion of the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. FERRY.]

Mr. HOWE. I do not propose to say a word upon that question, because I understand it is already agreed to that the bill shall be referred; and I think the assurances we have from the Senator from New Jersey and the Senator from Vermont are a sufficient guarantee that the bill will get back here in good season.

Mr. SUMNER. And in good condition. [Laughter.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. Much better than it is now. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Mr. President, but for a single remark which fell from the Senator from Massachusetts I should not have ventured to say a word, and I shall say but very little now.

It happens that from some observations made on a former occasion I got a notoriety upon this question of civil rights which I do not think I am entitled to. The honorable Senator from Massachusetts contributed somewhat on a former occasion to that notoriety, and he has seconded his own proposition to-day by referring to me as hostile to this bill in a sense, the implication of which is that I am hostile to the question of civil rights, particularly as applied to the colored population of this country. Sir, no Senator upon this floor and no man anywhere, from anything I ever uttered upon this floor or any vote that I ever gave upon this floor or elsewhere, is justified in drawing any such inference. As a general proposition, I have been a sort of disciple on this question to the Senator from Massachusetts, as he will testify. Never to my knowledge or belief, or, I think, to his, have I divided with him upon any question either of freedom, or emancipation of the slaves, or a question of civil rights. Sometimes, it is true, we have divided upon the best methods of reaching those objects; but in no instance that I remember—and if he knows of any I should like to have him state it now—has he found me a laggard, since I have been on this floor, in the direction in which he has been leading for many years.

Now, sir, what is my offense? What now has happened that, I do not say an attempt is made, but that circumstances somehow or other tend to give me notoriety upon the question before the Senate as hostile to the whole subject of the civil rights of the citizen? "The head and front of my offending" is that I have not found it consistent to adopt the measures of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts wholly and entirely for the accomplishment of that purpose.

Mr. SUMNER. May I interrupt my friend?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. SUMNER. My friend does not claim too much when he reminds the Senate of his constancy at each stage of our trials on this vast, protracted question. No one here knows how true he has been, how laborious, and how earnest, better than myself; but he will pardon me if I remind him that when it came to a supplemental civil-rights bill, which should place what are now regarded as the civil rights of the colored race under the safeguard of national statute, there my friend more than hesitated; he argued adversely, insisting that all or much belonged to the States. There my friend and myself parted—he went one way and I another; I most solemnly believing that the only true remedy is in a national statute, uniform and complete in its operation everywhere throughout the land; my excellent friend being willing, as I understood, to remit the undetermined rights of these people to the variegated and diversified legislation of thirty-seven States.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I regret that the honorable Senator from Massachusetts has been so indifferent an observer of what I have attempted to do upon this floor, and that he should so misunderstand me as to make the representation to the country that he now does. No sentiment, nor word, nor vote ever uttered or given by me on this floor justifies any such assumption. Sir, I antedate that Senator himself in the advocacy of the law of civil rights on this floor. When the act to protect the colored man in his civil rights was reported to the Senate in 1866, he will find that I raised my voice here in advance of him, congratulating the Senate and congratulating the country, as I remember, that now for the first time in the history of the Government we were able to put upon the national statutes protection to all its people, as the result of the war; that the slave, always theretofore under the national ban, now being a citizen, it was the proudest day in the history of our legislation that we were able to put upon the United States protection to the former slave. And yet it seems that the honorable Senator has really got the notion in his head that I am in favor of leaving that whole thing to the States. When, where, from what sentiment of mine, what word, what act of mine, does the Senator draw any such inference as that?

Sir, the only difference between the honorable Senator and myself is this: I would do it according to the Constitution of the country; the honorable Senator would do it anyhow. My honorable friend says that this bill ought to be passed, and passed at once. Why? Numerous conventions have indorsed it. Why, sir, are we to legislate in that way? And here comes the only difficulty in this case. Upon the question of civil rights as they are justified by the Constitution of the United States, I undertake to say, at any rate I believe, there is no conflict in the Senate of the United States. I am willing to go just as far as that instrument justifies, and I am willing that the Committee on the Judiciary should interpret it on that question, as the legal organ of the Senate. I did, it is true, on a former occasion, make a speech against the honorable Senator's bill, and I undertook in that speech to point out the constitutional difficulties in its way. I said never a word on that occasion that it was a subject that should be left to the States. That is not my conviction; those are not my opinions. The power is in the Constitution, and I have been in favor of exercising it from the beginning. I would not turn it over to the States.

Now, Mr. President, I ask my honorable friend whether on the whole it is not better for us to send this bill to the committee and have its action upon it?

Mr. SUMNER. I have consented to that.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If my honorable friend had consented to it on the first day of the session, instead of placing the bill upon the table, it seems to me we should have been saved all this trouble. It is in harmony with the doings of the Senate that we should have a report from a committee on this subject. The reports of the committee of this body, as the Senator himself says, are eyes and ears to the body, and we have a right to have both. It hardly becomes my honorable friend to resist this, even on his own practice; and no member of the Senate at any time, as a general proposition, has been more desirous of acting in harmony with the usages of the Senate. That Senator himself at this very session introduced a bill which had been reported upon some seventeen or eighteen times, and always I believe, with a single exception, in a friendly way; and yet the honorable Senator introduced it on the first day of the session, or very early in the session, and moved its reference to the same committee from which it had come so often, he himself having several times, I think, reported it and commended it to the action of the Senate. There was a bill on which the Senate has always for a series of years, for a whole generation, with a single exception, been harmonious, been in harmony with the action of the committee; and yet the honorable Senator, in deference to the general usages of this body, very properly sent it to the committee, to be reported again. If this bill had taken the same course, my own judgment is that the Senate would have been delivered of the whole proposition before this time.

I rose, Mr. President, only to say two things: First, that I am not entitled to the notoriety, whether it is enviable or not, that has been given me upon this general subject of hostility to extending to our colored citizens full, ample, and complete protection in their civil rights. I have never committed myself to any proposition adverse to that. The whole thing, so far as I know, has grown out of criticisms which I have made of the bill which the Senator on a former occasion introduced; which was not this bill by any means, but which was vastly more objectionable than even this bill.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, without intending to express any opinion as to the merits of the bill now before the Senate, for I think that would be premature, I may be allowed to observe that I think it is time that a civil-rights bill should be passed. I think the majority of this Senate, on principle and otherwise, are pledged to the passage of a civil-rights bill, and I hope that its passage may not be unreasonably delayed. I think it is proper to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that he himself is responsible for the fact that this bill is not now before the Senate in a condition to be acted upon in some way. If the Senator had consented on the day that the bill was introduced, the first day of the session, to its reference to the proper committee, we should have had it back before this time. That committee would have felt constrained to make some report upon it long before this time, and it would have been before the Senate for consideration and action.

I do not myself feel that there is any great importance in referring this bill to a committee, for the reason that the question has been so long before the Senate and has been so amply discussed; but still that is the usage of the Senate; we do that with regard to all bills, unless under some very strong emergency; and if the Senator had consented in the first place to the reference of the bill we should have had it back long ago. So, I think, he has nobody to blame but himself that this bill is not now before the Senate to be acted upon; but I may be allowed to express the hope, and I have no reason to doubt that it will be gratified, that the Judiciary Committee will promptly examine this bill, and report back a civil-rights bill upon which the Senate can take action before long. I think that ought to be done for very many considerations.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, I should not say another word, except for the ardor with which my friend from Indiana comes forward to throw a little blame on me. He thinks that if I had consented to an earlier reference of this bill it would now be in order before the Senate; but he says that in a case of strong emergency bills are not referred to committees. Now, I ask the Senator from Indiana if this is not a case of strong emergency? The bill has been pending nearly four solid years, during all which time a portion of our fellow-citizens, counted by the million, have been exposed to indignity; and because I tried to speed the result, hoping to bring the Senate to a generous conclusion of the whole measure without a reference to the committee, the Senator from Indiana thus tardily seeks to rebuke me. If I erred at all it was because I trusted the Senate. I felt that with this bill on the Calendar and within reach, it could not hesitate. I was unwilling to see it in a committee-room, where the Senate, in a generous moment, could not take it up any day, and, so far as the Senate was concerned, make it the law of the land. I put too much faith in this body, which I ought to know well. I did, sir, have generous trust. I did believe that at some early day the bill would be considered and adopted. I have been disappointed. More than once I have tried to reach it; I have tried to bring it before the Senate; but you know well the impediments; you know that other important matters have occupied attention, so that I could not, with any reasonable chance of success, seek to press this important measure. That, sir, is the occasion for delay; and I do not think—I hardly like to make any question with my friend—but I do not think, he was generous in the imputation that he sought to throw upon me. Had that Senator on the first day of the session, or when I made an effort at a later day to bring it up, come forward then to aid me in pressing it on the attention of the Senate; had he reminded the Senate and the country how many fellow-citizens were shut out from their rights, and that a denial of rights does not allow delay; had these words come from the Senator at that time, ah! we should have been having no such debate as has occurred to-day. The bill would have been hastened on its way, and a people long enslaved and degraded would be at last lifted to equality. O, I wish the Senator had not made the mistake he did!

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, in the chair.) The question is on the motion of the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. FERRY,] to refer the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary, upon which the yeas and nays are ordered. The Chair now understands that there is no objection to the reference. If there is no objection the bill will be considered as referred. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill is referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I wish to say that I have no objection to the reference of this bill to the Committee on the Judiciary. I have no trouble myself in reference to this bill and to every provision in it. I shall vote against every provision in the bill whenever it comes before this Senate for a vote, whether it be reported from the Judiciary Committee or is taken up from the Calendar. What I now wish to say is, that I have listened to this debate and I have not heard a single voice raised in defense of the suffering part of the race to which I belong. In New England, in the Northern States, we hear complaints of hundreds of thousands of men who are suffering for the necessaries of life; and yet in the Senate of the United States to-day not a word has been said in defense or in favor of protecting the downtrodden portion of the white race of this country, and everything that has been said has been said in reference to securing equal rights to the colored people of this country!

Sir, I am not opposed to the colored people of this country having every right which properly and legitimately belongs to them; but it is strange that so much of the time of this Senate should be taken up in the advocacy of the rights of the colored race, when portions of our own race are downtrodden and oppressed even in the very State which the Senator from Massachusetts represents. Sir, as a citizen of this country, as a Senator upon this floor, I hope to see the rights of every portion of the people of this country secured; I hope to see the rights of the humblest portion of the white race secured as well as of the colored race; and I protest against the constant imputation upon my own race of oppressing the colored people of this country, when I know that in the State which I represent, and in many of the Southern States of this Union, the colored people are respected in all their just rights. This, sir, is what I desired to say. The time of the Senate has been taken up for days in discussing the rights of the colored people; but why have not gentlemen shown their zeal in trying to mitigate the wrongs and sufferings of the white portion of their countrymen?

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator from Delaware a question before he sits down?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. He brings in New England, and I am a little interested in that section of the country. I wish he would tell the Senate what rights of white men in New England are denied that they ought to possess, in his opinion, by any law or constitution.

Mr. SAULSBURY. In some of the New England States white men are not allowed to vote, as I understand, without possessing a property qualification.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly they are not. We do not allow people in the State-prison to vote.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Yet in your enforcement act of 1870, you enforce the right of every negro to vote, and you punish men under that act if they deny that right to colored men; when, at the same time, if it is denied to white men, they are not punished for it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, the Senator is as much mistaken almost as if he lived in New England. [Laughter.] The act of 1870 does not declare that the colored man shall have a right to vote. It declares that every man, be he black or white, who is an American citizen, and otherwise entitled by law, shall be allowed to vote without any State Legislature, or State sovereignty, or State aristocracy, undertaking to declare that the color of his skin shall make a difference. The laws of New England, as far as I understand them—which, perhaps, is not a great way—declare the same thing, and punish officers in substantially the same way for depriving any citizen who is otherwise entitled to vote, who is twenty-one years of age, and is out of State-prison, and is not in the poor-house, of his right to vote. So that I think my friend from Delaware has gone a little too far when he says that the laws and constitutions of New England are depriving white men of rights which we are attempting to assert in favor of black men.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Allow me to ask the Senator a question. There are other rights besides the right to the elective franchise. I ask the Senator whether, in the section of country which he represents, there are not hundreds and thousands of operatives to-day living upon the mere scanty pittance that is doled out to them by the large manufacturers, the rich men of that section, who use them worse than the slaves of the South were ever used?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should say no to that, decidedly. It is perfectly true, Mr. President, no doubt, that there are a great many poor white men in New England who are throughout the hard winter being aided by charity; but the fact that they have not any money has been owing to their own personal misfortunes or to their own personal neglect. No task-master in New England has goaded them to toil with the whip, and has fed them as he does his cattle in the stable, according to the stock of wheat or of fodder he might have on hand. Every poor man in New England has had always the equal rights of the citizen, the right to the school and the church and the cemetery, the right to make his own bargain for his own labor, and the right to face the proudest and richest of his neighbors at the polls and in the ballot-box and in the jury-box, and everywhere else.

Now, when my friend finds a state of things in New England where about one-twentieth, perhaps one-thirtieth, of the community have enslaved the rest, and have burned down their school-houses, and have burned down their churches, and have made them as near brutes as it is possible for human malignity to make them, he may then undertake to draw parallels and comparisons between the condition of things in one part of the country and the other; but until then, Mr. President, I think that we had better look with a fair face at the real truth of things, and not such imaginary notions as this.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator be kind enough to specify the section of country to which he alludes where churches are pulled down and school-houses burned down because colored people have them?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I believe we have some reports in this body, and in the other House, of only a very few years ago, showing states of things of that character. I have not brought them in with me this morning, not expecting that my friend from Delaware would make so great a mistake as he has. He must excuse me, therefore, for not giving them now.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The honorable Senator made a sweeping declaration, and referred to sections of the country where that was true. I have called upon him to specify them, and he has failed to do it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. E. BABCOCK, his Secretary, announced that the President had, on the 23d instant, approved and signed the bill (S. No. 215) in relation to the printing of the Biennial Register, commonly called the Blue Book.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next business on the Calendar is the joint resolution (S. R. No. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing for the election of President by a direct vote of the people, and abolishing the office of Vice-President.

Mr. SUMNER. When I introduced that joint resolution, proposing an amendment to the Constitution, I stated that on its reference to the committee I might ask the Senate to hear some remarks upon it. I do not know, however, that there is any occasion for me to ask any postponement. I beg to call the attention of my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, [Mr. MORTON,] to the character of the proposition. It is an attempt to secure an election of President by a direct vote of the people, so as to supersede the machinery of party conventions. Such, sir, is the character of the attempt. It will be for the committee, and for others carefully considering it, to see whether the machinery provided will operate to that extent. Many who have examined it think that it will. I should not have introduced it unless, after very considerable study, I had satisfied myself that it contained elements worthy of most careful consideration. I believe at this day there is a general desire that the President of the United States should be elected directly by the people, without the intervention of electoral colleges; and I think there is another desire, not so general, but still which occupies the minds of intelligent persons, to supersede if possible the powerful influence exerted by nominating conventions in advance of the election. That is very difficult to accomplish. I see the impediments in the way. I know not that the amendment I propose will effectually reach that result; but, as I have already said, others who have given much attention to the question think that it will, and I beg to commend it seriously to the attention of the committee. I have introduced it in good faith, anxious that it should find favor, if not in all respects at least in some of its particulars; and I do believe that the more it is studied, the more carefully it is considered, the better will it commend itself, and the more surely will it be seen to carry out the result which I think so many people now desire.

I have said that that result was embodied in two propositions: one, the election of the President directly by the people. I am afraid that any proposition, short of that which I now offer, will be inadequate to produce that result. I fear that the proposition that I believe my friend from Indiana has in hand will not operate completely and effectively to that result. And then my friend would leave the machinery of party conventions still extant to exert a controlling influence over the elections. My hope is to supersede that machinery and to hand over the election of President to the direct voice of the people.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I will say in response to the Senator from Massachusetts, that the Committee on Privileges and Elections have been engaged for a long time in the consideration of the proper mode of electing the President of the United States. They hope to be able to make a report in the course of two or three weeks on the subject. At present it would be entirely premature for me to attempt to express any opinion on the question.

Mr. SUMNER. I move the reference of the joint resolution to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 1560) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to reduce duties on imports, and to reduce internal taxes, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1873;" in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 798) to establish certain post-routes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 89) in relation to the lines of telegraph connecting the Capitol with the various Departments of the Government, with amendments, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. No. 61) providing for busts of the late Chief Justices Roger Brooke Taney and Salmon Portland Chase, to be placed in the Supreme Court Room of the United States; and it was thereupon signed by the President of the Senate pro tempore.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. GORDON. I ask unanimous consent that the following order be granted:

Ordered, That John Jones, Randolph Ramsey, and William G. Lauterman, sureties of William Quillian, postmaster at Milledgeville, Georgia, have leave to withdraw their petition and papers from the files of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has there been an adverse report in the case?

Mr. GORDON. I think not; but I cannot answer positively.

Mr. RAMSEY. My impression is that there was an adverse report in that case.

Mr. GORDON. I am not aware of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let copies be retained, then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY, of Michigan.) The order will be considered made, on condition that copies be left.

Mr. GORDON. Very well. I also offer the following order:

Ordered, That the papers in the case of Nehemiah Garrison, deceased, of Cherokee County, Georgia, on the files of the Senate, be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has there been an adverse report in that case?

Mr. GORDON. I think not. It is a case where the Court of Claims rendered a judgment, and the papers were sent in to the Senate, and are now on the files. I simply ask that they be referred to the Committee on Claims.

There being no objection, the order was agreed to.

THE BANKRUPTCY ACT.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to give notice that the day after to-morrow, if it shall be the pleasure of the Senate, I shall ask it to take up and proceed to dispose of the bankrupt bill, so called, or to make progress from time to time until it is finished.

Mr. MORTON. I suggest to the Senator from Vermont that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CARPENTER] proposes to speak on the Louisiana affairs on the day after to-morrow.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I will say the day after to-morrow, or as soon thereafter as I can be heard, as the saying is.

REMOVAL OF POLITICAL DISABILITIES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next bill on the Calendar is the bill (S. No. 133) to relieve Thomas Hardeman, jr., of Georgia, and William L. Cabell, of Texas, of their political disabilities.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That was a motion entered to reconsider. Let that be laid aside. My friend from Georgia [Mr. GORDON] will furnish me with some papers on the subject presently.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be considered as laid aside for the present.

NATIONAL BANKS WITHOUT CIRCULATION.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 71) to authorize the organization of national banks without circulation, the consideration of which was resumed by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SHERMAN. That bill has been considered heretofore, and I should like to have it passed.

The bill was read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear that bill explained a little.

Mr. SHERMAN. This bill was discussed the other day; perhaps the Senator from Vermont was not in at the time. There are two separate objects provided for in the bill. One clause authorizes the organization of banks without circulation, or rather modifies the present law in that respect. Under the present law a national bank may be organized without circulation, but it must deposit an amount of bonds equal to 30 per cent. of its capital, which requires a very large deposit of bonds. This will authorize the organization of banks without circulation by a deposit of bonds to the amount of $10,000 and under. There can be no great object in the Government requiring a deposit of bonds in order to charter a bank without circulation, because it gets nothing from the Government except the bare organization.

The chief trouble and delay grew out of the last clause of this bill; and a bill for that specific purpose was referred to the Committee on Finance, and was amended. My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] has the bill before him as amended; and I will accept the modification which has been made in committee, which I think will remove all objection. That authorizes any national bank desiring to retire a portion of its circulation to deposit with the Secretary of the Treasury an amount not less than $10,000, from time to time, and thus reduce its circulation. Some objection was made to the phraseology of the section; but we have modified it.

Mr. ALLISON. I appeal to the chairman of the Committee on Finance to let this bill pass by until he reports, if he proposes to report, any further measure in relation to the national banks. It seems to me that this is only a partial measure. Is it not proposed to do something more with reference to that subject during the present session?

Mr. SHERMAN. The reason we introduced separate propositions was because we supposed there would be no objection to this; but if the Senator desires delay I certainly do not wish to press the bill now.

Mr. ALLISON. I am not quite clear as to the effect of this bill. I think it may enable national banks to place in the Treasury a large amount of greenback circulation without knowing exactly where it is going or what is to be done in reference to it. I may be mistaken, however.

Mr. SHERMAN. The amendment made by the Committee on Finance removes that difficulty entirely, because it requires the Secretary of the Treasury to cancel the bank currency sent in for redemption. However, if the Senator desires time, I have no objection to letting the bill go over.

Mr. ALLISON. I think it had better go over.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let me suggest to the Senator from Ohio, before the bill goes over, that I think he is mistaken in a date in his bill. The national banking act referred to reads in the bill as "approved June 30, 1864," whereas the true date of its passage was June 3, 1864. Perhaps that had better be corrected before we forget it.

Mr. SHERMAN. The national banking act was approved June 3, 1864.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The correction will be made.

Mr. SCOTT. I move to amend the latter part of the bill by inserting in lieu of the words there used the amendment that was reported by the Committee on Finance to Senate bill No. 147. My motion is to strike out, commencing in line 12, the following words:

> And national banks may withdraw their bonds on deposit as security for their circulating notes in amounts of $10,000, upon returning to the Comptroller of the Currency lawful money, to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States, for the redemption of an amount of circulating notes of such banks equal to the amount issued upon such bonds.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

> And any banking association that may decide to reduce its capital stock, as provided in the thirteenth section of the act entitled "An act to provide a national currency, secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof," approved June 3, 1864, shall be entitled to take up a pro rata portion of its bonds, upon depositing lawful money of the United States, or returning its own circulating notes in the proportion required by law; and whenever such reduction shall be authorized under said section, any notes of such bank thereafter coming into the Treasury of the United States shall be canceled until the amount so canceled, together with such as shall be redeemed, shall equal the amount of reduction authorized.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. BAYARD. When this bill was up before, I expressed my views in opposition to it, and I do not now desire to repeat them to the Senate. It is plain to me that the first part of the bill providing for an endless crop of small banks will be exceedingly prejudicial to the character of national banks, placing them in the hands of holders of small amounts of Government bonds. They will be able to dignify their business by the name of bank, when the amount they have at risk is the small sum of $10,000. I therefore move to strike out the first ten lines of the section down to the words "section 16 of that act."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. ALLISON. What is the effect of that?

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to say that the Comptroller of the Currency has in three annual reports called upon us to provide for the cases of numerous applications, mostly from the South and West, for small banks to be organized under the national banking system. He has urged it as a matter of considerable importance to the success of the banking system in order to diversify it and spread it all over the United States. Under the limitations of the law he cannot give them circulation. But many institutions in the South and West want the facilities, the credit, and, I may add, the restraints of the national banking act.

Now, I desire to call the attention of Senators to the present state of affairs. In all the Eastern States there has been no trouble about the organization of national banks. They are as numerous almost as the sands of the sea. I am tired and sick of hearing this question about the unequal distribution of bank circulation. I do think it a gross injustice; I have no words to defend it; and I do not want to see it perpetuated any longer than it is possible to apply a remedy. I shall vote for every measure whatever that will tend to rectify it. Now, the purpose of this bill, according to the statement of the Comptroller, and he has often mentioned it to me as a matter of importance to the Department, is to diversify the system and give to the people of the West and South opportunities to start national banks.

What objection is there? It is said that it makes national banks too numerous. My friend from Delaware says it makes them too numerous. Why? They get nothing from the Government of the United States, except the bare, naked charter. They have the power on the deposit of bonds to take the name of a national bank without circulation; and then they are under the restraints of the national-bank act; they are subject to examination, to revision; they have to make reports, and are under all the burdens of the national banking system; but they wish to assimilate their business to the business of the national banks. I never could see any objection to it, nor any reason why this power should not be freely granted; and when the proper officer of the Department has called upon us to extend this power, I never could see any reason why it should not be done. And especially do I see many reasons why Senators from States that have a great number of banks and great banking facilities should not object to this little demand to satisfy a local grievance. So far as the people of Ohio are concerned, no bank of this kind will be organized in Ohio, because our laws are free; anybody there can start the business of banking under a general law, and no national bank would be organized under a law of this kind. We have no such restraints or limitations, but this will be a great convenience in the Southern and Western States, where their laws do prevent practically the organizing of banks, and where a banking business can only be conducted by a private partnership.

Mr. CONKLING. What does the Senator mean by saying that this would not affect Ohio? I do not know that I comprehended him exactly.

Mr. SHERMAN. I say it would not be acted under in Ohio because we have a general law of the State under which any association of persons may conduct a bank; any partnership may resolve itself into a corporation and call itself a bank on filing five thousand or ten thousand dollar bonds; but in many of the Southern and Western States the laws prohibit practically the organization of banking companies by imposing such restrictions as make it absolutely impossible. Under the circumstances it was deemed that it would be wise to extend the benefits of the national banking system all over the West and South, to as many corporations as should choose to organize under it, giving the Government security to the amount of $10,000 that they would obey the law. Now, this is no great change in the law; it has always been so; but nobody can now organize a bank under this feature of the act without depositing in the Treasury $30,000 of bonds on $100,000 capital. That is deemed to be too large; and the only effect of this proposition is to reduce the limit, so that instead of requiring $30,000 in bonds to be filed, only $10,000 shall be required. I can see no reason in the world why this should not be granted. I think it would tend to popularize the system of national banks and extend it.

The Senator from Pennsylvania hands me a letter of Mr. Knox, in which he incloses this particular bill, and says:

> I have the honor to inclose herewith a bill to authorize the organization of national banks without circulation. This bill was considered and reported by your committee, and passed the Senate during the last session. I have added an amendment to the original bill as it passed, providing that national banks already organized without circulation be authorized to withdraw their bonds in excess of $10,000, and authorizing banks to withdraw their bonds in amounts of $10,000 upon returning legal-tender notes in amounts equal to the amount of circulating notes issued upon such bonds.
>
> I have on file a number of applications for the organization of national banks without circulation, and the passage of the inclosed bill will give me an opportunity to authorize the organization of such institutions.
>
> As there is no objection to the passage of the bill, so far as I am aware, I trust you will be able to report it from the committee and obtain its passage previous to the holiday recess.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, the suggestion is that $10,000 banks without circulation are to be useful to the southern and western portions of this country in the way of rectifying the gross inequality in the distribution of banking capital, originally the mistake, so called, of the Comptroller of the Currency, but which Congress has never yet successfully remedied. Sir, that object will be but poorly accomplished by this bill. What the southern and western people want, they say, is their fair proportion of circulation. They claim, and claim truly, that while in New England in proportion to her population there should have been a grant of $39,000,000 of currency, there has been $110,000,000 allowed—a gross disproportion. Now, if that were proposed to be rectified by banks of circulation in order to equalize the amount in the southern and western portions of this country, I could understand it; but surely you do not propose to do that by making banks without circulation and of deposit merely.

Sir, there is no good reason to my mind why Congress should by this method enter into an unlimited system of incorporation of a class of small banks. The power of the Federal Government to grant charters of incorporation is questionable still. The creation of the national banks was subsidiary to the power of the Government to regulate currency. It was under that power that the national banking system had its origin; but that was a system of regulation of currency, and the banks created under that were banks of circulation, and the circulation was furnished to them from the Treasury of the United States on certain terms. But here is a proposition, not to regulate the currency, not to increase or distribute currency, but to incorporate a class of banks for deposit only. This is something that never yet has been attempted in this country, the chartering, so to speak, of a class of banks who are to be disconnected entirely from the currency of the country. You will have nothing to do with their deposits of coin. You will have nothing to do with their reserves of greenbacks or other matters of legal tender. You simply give them the right to open a banking-house and call themselves a national bank, because they can possess themselves of $10,000 of national bonds.

Mr. President, there are charters obtained from the States all over the country to be banks of deposit and not of circulation under our present laws. There are such banks in every State. There would be banks of circulation as well as deposit under the State laws, did not your 10 per cent. tax put them out of possible existence. Where, therefore, is there the least necessity, where is the slightest benefit, in Congress incorporating a class of these small banks all over the country, not giving them circulation, not attempting to remedy those deficiencies of which we have heard such complaint in the western and southern portions of the country, but simply to incorporate banks of deposit merely? There is plenty of power existing in the States to do it, plenty of opportunity to do it.

As I said before, not only do I think the present measure unnecessary, but I think it ill-advised for other reasons, which would require a more extended statement. I am strongly in favor of disconnecting the banking system of the country from the Treasury of the United States. I do not believe that one helps the other; on the contrary, I believe the effect upon the banks is to be regretted. The power of centralization, in many respects, is increased to an extent which, in my opinion, is unwholesome. In the present case I believe I have reasonably stated to the Senate grounds for justly designating the pending bill as unnecessary, if not beyond the proper exercise of the power of Congress under the Constitution.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Mr. President, it is fair to say that the purpose of the Comptroller of the Currency in this bill is to obtain returns from the savings-banks throughout the country of the amount of deposits that they have from time to time. As they are at present organized, the Comptroller has no power to ascertain, except indirectly, the amount of deposits upon which taxes are assessed, and therefore cannot make a complete report annually in reference to the affairs of the savings-banks.

Mr. CONKLING. How is that to be brought about under this bill? What is there here to enable him to ascertain anything about it?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. It places them under the general banking law the moment they are national banks. Now, it is fair to contrast the benefits with the evils that may result. The only evil that will result from this will be to empower individuals to establish a national bank on a capital of $10,000, and, hoisting the national flag, perhaps obtain a credit for three or four times that amount, or any amount, undeservedly. I had rather come to the conclusion that the first portion of the bill, proposed to be stricken out by the Senator from Delaware, was the best portion of the bill.

To the latter part of the bill an objection has been suggested to me since it was reported, which I think is a valid one. The last portion of the bill provides that any national bank with a circulation may withdraw its bonds on deposit as security for its circulating notes in amounts of $10,000 from time to time. That would be the only power which an existing live bank would have to reduce the amount of its circulating notes. Under this provision take, for instance, the Bank of Commerce of New York, with ten millions of capital; they might at once return the whole amount, with the exception of $10,000, and still retain their title as a national bank. It is for the Senate to say whether the benefits to be derived from this bill are greater than the evils, and vote accordingly.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I certainly shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from Delaware. The clause which he moves to strike out affords great facilities to the creation of numerous banks. It is said that by the law now, on the deposit of $30,000 of Government bonds, banks without circulation may be created; but I understand that the Secretary of the Treasury has hitherto refused to give the privilege to any great extent of creating those banks. This affirmative action on the part of Congress would be a strong intimation to him that he should go on and create these banks of deposit, and I think it would bring reproach upon the name of the national banks.

But the more serious objection is this: Four or five brokers or money dealers associate themselves together as a bank. Before they make that association they are personally liable to their depositors; after they make it they are not personally liable. There is no liability but on the part of the corporation, and all the security that it is necessary for that corporation to have is the $10,000 of bonds; and they may do business to the amount of hundreds and hundreds of thousands.

I hope that the amendment of the Senator from Delaware will be adopted, and then that somebody will make another amendment to strike out the rest of the bill, which, I do really agree with the Senator from Vermont is more objectionable than that which is proposed to be stricken out now.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, when this bill was up before for consideration I put the question, under what clause of the Constitution is the power to be found that authorizes the first branch of this bill—the granting of charters to banks without circulation? The only answer I received was that that was already authorized by law. I need not say to the lawyers of the Senate that that is no answer at all to the question.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me a word?

Mr. THURMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BOUTWELL. It is to this point: when it became necessary for me to examine the act of June 3, 1864, for the purpose of forming an opinion as to the power of the Treasury Department under that law to authorize the organization of banks like those referred to in this bill, I came to the conclusion that the power did not exist, although it had been exercised by my predecessor. I may be in error about it, however.

Mr. THURMAN. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Massachusetts for that statement, for that takes away even the answer, insufficient as it was, that was given to my question.

Now, sir, the power to authorize banks of issue has always been referred to either one of three clauses of the Constitution. The validity of the charter of the Bank of the United States was referred sometimes to one and sometimes to another of these three clauses of the Constitution, but mainly to the clause which I will now read: "The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts"—or as it ought to read, and is read by the interpretation placed upon it by the Supreme Court of the United States—"in order to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States." It was said that a Bank of the United States might be a convenient and proper instrumentality to aid the Government in the collection of "taxes, duties, imposts, and excises in order to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States." Then another clause of the Constitution was relied on, the clause which gives to Congress the power "to borrow money on the credit of the United States;" and then a third clause, which has been relied upon to justify the issue of legal-tender notes, is the power "to coin money, regulate the value thereof and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures." If there is any other clause in the Constitution that authorizes Congress to create banks it has escaped my observation.

It is here proposed that Congress shall charter banks without any power whatsoever to issue notes for circulation. If so, I want to know what limit there is upon the power of Congress to grant charters of incorporation? Why may they not grant charters of incorporation for every conceivable purpose for which a corporate body may be an efficient instrument, if they have the power to grant such charters as are provided for in this bill?

It cannot be put upon the ground that Congress has a right to coin money and that you may make paper money; for this proposes a set of institutions that shall have no power whatsoever to issue any paper. It cannot be put upon the ground of borrowing money; for these are not instrumentalities that can, to any extent, aid the Government in borrowing money. Nor can it be put upon the clause on which the validity of the bank charter was mainly rested, the power "to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and exeises in order to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare." I cannot for the life of me, as at present advised, see any power in Congress to grant any such charter, unless, indeed, the power of Congress to grant charters is without any limitation whatsoever. I cannot, therefore, vote for this clause in this bill, because I do not believe that Congress has power to enact it. But if it had the power to enact it, I should still be opposed to it on grounds of expediency.

Of what possible advantage can it be to grant charters to these various institutions? Every man in the United States now has the natural right, unless prohibited by some law of the land, to engage in the banking business; he has the right to receive deposits, to buy and sell bills of exchange, to do, in short, every act that appertains to the business of banking, except the single function of issuing circulating notes. Now, it is proposed that these rights, which belong of common right to individuals throughout the United States, shall be conferred as corporate powers by an act of the Congress of the United States. I, for my part, can see no good that can result from any such legislation. In the first place it is to withdraw the capital which is now under the control of the State Legislatures, subject to their supervision and to their regulation according to the local wants and local interests of the several States, and place it under the protection, under the supervision, and under the control of the Congress of the United States. I do not think that ought to be done, even if we have the power to do it. I see no good whatever that can result from that, at all commensurate with the evil that would be likely to follow from such a practice.

In respect to the last clause of the bill, which is totally disconnected with the first clause—has no relevancy whatsoever to the first clause—I leave that upon the objections which have already been stated; but to the first clause I do object, first, on the ground that we have not the constitutional power to enact it, and second, that if we had, it would be most impolitic to do so.

Mr. CROZIER. If this bill were passed, what would be the effect of it? The construction that has been given to the national banking act has limited the amount of capital that may be engaged in national banking to $354,000,000. That is the amount of currency provided for by the act, and the construction given by the Department limits the amount of capital that may be engaged in national banking to three hundred and fifty-four millions. One effect of this bill would be to increase the amount that might be invested in banking capital, and not thereby increase the national-bank circulation.

Mr. SHERMAN. My friend from Kansas will allow me to correct him. There is no limit in the banking law to the amount of capital of national banks. The amount of circulation cannot exceed $354,000,000. The amount of banking capital is now largely in excess of that. There is no limit to the amount of capital employed.

Mr. CROZIER. I understand it differently. I know that the amount of circulation fixed in the national-bank act is $354,000,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. But the amount of capital is more than $100,000,000 in excess of the amount of circulation.

Mr. CROZIER. My information was that the construction given at the Department was that that limited the amount of capital; but it seems I am wrong in that. So let it pass.

It would not follow as an effect from this bill, were it passed in the form in which it is before us, that banks of $10,000 capital could be organized all over the country. The bill provides that they may be organized without circulation, under the provisions of the general banking act. The new organizations, with the single exception of the amount of bonds they are to deposit, would be regulated by the law now in force. That law provides that no bank shall go into operation until $30,000 of Government bonds have been deposited in the Treasury of the United States. This bill would authorize, when they had complied with the other provisions of the national-bank act as it now stands, the organization of banks by depositing $10,000 in bonds, instead of $30,000, with the Treasury of the United States. That is another effect which would flow from the bill, as I read it, that would not be very different from the existing condition of things.

What is the object of requiring any portion of the capital of a national bank to be invested in bonds deposited with the Treasury? And, by the way, no national bank can be established with a less capital than $50,000 paid in. The general minimum is $100,000. It must be paid in under the provisions of this act before they can get a certificate to proceed to business, but in certain cities the Comptroller of the Currency is authorized to permit the organization of national banks with a capital of $50,000. In either case $30,000 is required to be deposited in bonds with the Treasury, whether they get circulation or not. But suppose that a bank with $100,000 be organized, all its capital paid in, they buy $100,000 of bonds and deposit them with the Treasury for circulation, and get circulation to the amount of $90,000, 90 per cent. of the bonds deposited. Now if the object of requiring any bonds to be deposited when there is no circulation out be to secure to the extent that it will secure the depositors in the national banks so organized, then with this provision adopted they would be in about the same situation in reference to depositors that they are now. Ninety thousand dollars of the $100,000 are deposited to secure circulation. There are only $10,000 left to secure depositors. In the cases provided for by this bill, if the capital were $100,000, and they were required only to deposit $10,000, there would be the same security, so far as depositors are concerned, that there is now where they issue circulation; so that the effect of this bill, as I understand it, would not be to authorize what are called $10,000 banks all over the country. A bank could not be organized under this bill with less than $50,000 capital, and not then unless in a city of less than ten thousand inhabitants, and then subject to the will of the Comptroller.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. SCOTT. The objection made by the Senator from Vermont to the latter clause of this bill was one that was considered in committee, and the amendment which has been adopted obviates that objection. His objection was that a bank—and he instanced the Bank of Commerce, of New York—having a very large capital might proceed to withdraw its whole capital, and remain a chartered national bank without having the capital required under the original act. Now, the amendment which has been adopted requires the reduction of capital to be made under the thirteenth section of the national-currency act, and if the Senator will give me his attention I will show him by reading it that the objection does not apply to the amendment which has been adopted, and is in the bill as it now stands. The section reads thus—at least that part of it which applies to the reduction of capital:

> And every association shall have power, by the vote of shareholders owning two thirds of the capital stock, to reduce the capital of such association to any sum not below the amount required by this act, in the formation of associations: Provided, That by no such reduction shall its capital be brought below the amount required by this act for its outstanding circulation; nor shall any such reduction be made until the amount of the proposed reduction has been reported to the Comptroller of the Currency, and his approval thereof obtained.

The Senate is familiar with the limitations imposed by the seventh section in reference to the amount of capital required by banks in larger cities and in smaller ones. Now, the original bill did authorize the withdrawal of amounts of $10,000 without referring at all to this section under which the capital may be reduced; but the amendment refers specifically to that section, and thereby prohibits the reduction of capital to an amount below that authorized in the seventh section.

Mr. MERRIMON. Mr. President, passing by the question as to whether Congress has the power to authorize the organization of banks of this sort, I object to the passage of this bill on two grounds: first, that it materially interferes with a fundamental provision of the existing national-currency act; and, secondly, on the ground that there is no necessity for it.

The currency act provides, in section 7—

> That no association shall be organized under this act with a less capital than $100,000, nor, in a city whose population exceeds fifty thousand persons, with a less capital than $200,000: Provided, That banks with a capital of not less than $50,000 may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, be organized in any place the population of which does not exceed six thousand inhabitants.

Section 16 provides—

> That every association, after having complied with the provisions of this act, preliminary to the commencement of banking business under its provisions, and before it shall be authorized to commence business, shall transfer and deliver to the Treasurer of the United States any United States registered bonds bearing interest to an amount not less than $30,000 nor less than one-third of the capital stock paid in, which bonds shall be deposited with the Treasurer of the United States, and by him safely kept in his office until the same shall be otherwise disposed of, in pursuance of the provisions of this act.

These two provisions are fundamental in their character in this act. Under the first section which I have read, no bank can be organized with a less capital than $50,000, and a bank with $50,000 capital must have deposited with the Treasurer of the United States $30,000 of United States bonds; and if the capital stock shall be greater than $50,000, then the amount of bonds deposited with the Treasurer must be equal to one-third of the capital stock. The purpose of this deposit with the Treasurer of the United States is twofold: First, to secure the bill-holder. The Government by the provisions of the currency act is bound for the notes issued by the bank, and these bonds are deposited with the Government to the end that it may be indemnified if it should be called upon to pay these notes. But it is not for that purpose alone. It is provided in express terms in another clause that when a bank shall fail these bonds shall be applied specially to the redemption of the circulating notes of the bank first. After that, by the plain implication of the statute, they are to be devoted to the general purposes of indemnifying the creditors of the bank.

What, then, is the proposition contained in this bill? It is to change this fundamental provision of the law. It is, in the first place, to allow the creation of banks not of issue with a less capital than $50,000, to wit, $10,000. It is, in the next place, to allow a bank to have all the privileges conferred by the currency act, and they are great in their character and advantages in setting up a bank in any community; to allow those who go on and set up such a bank to avail themselves of all the advantages of the act, without doing what a fundamental provision of the present currency law requires, to wit, depositing with the Treasurer bonds equal to one-third of the capital stock, which is a great protection, a material protection, and a distinctive fundamental feature of the present law for the purpose of creating a protection, not only to the bill-holders, but to whosoever shall deal with the bank, whether they be depositors, or persons who shall loan money, or persons who shall have any obligations upon the bank whatsoever.

In the next place, I say that the bill is unnecessary. Why should it be passed? What end is to be subserved in the general interests of the people of the United States by it? How much better off are the people in dealing with a bank of this character than they are with a private bank or a bank authorized by a charter granted by a State Legislature? I can conceive of none if the indemnity to the depositors is cut off by providing that only $10,000 shall be deposited with the Treasurer of the United States for the indemnity of those who shall deal with the bank.

The only reason that I have heard offered for this bill is that a banker who has not the privilege of issuing notes cannot make a sufficient amount of money to pay him for his trouble in banking. Sir, that is not the experience of the country. The experience is directly the reverse. The banks have for the last six or eight years, ever since the war, been lending money at an average of from 1 to 1½ per cent. a month. I think it may be safely said that they realize 1 per cent. a month for their capital stock and the money they use. Suppose we take a bank of the smallest capital stock authorized by law—$50,000. In the first place, such a bank must have $30,000 of bonds deposited with the Treasurer. Let us see what its earnings are. It receives annually from the Government, as interest upon that $30,000 of bonds, $1,800 in gold. Then it lends the amount of its capital stock, which is $50,000. It realizes 1 per cent. a month on that. That is $6,000 more. Then suppose that such a bank has $100,000 of deposits—and that is a very reasonable allowance; a bank in a business community, where it is necessary at all, will receive more than $100,000 of deposits—then 1 per cent. interest on its deposits is equal to $12,000 more. So that, in the case I put, the bank would realize the sum of $19,800 clear per annum. I think in all conscience that is enough for a bank with that much capital invested to realize from that sum in one year.

So that, I say, the objection that the capital is not profitably invested, or reasonably so, when the bank is required to deposit in the Treasury bonds equal to one-third of its capital stock, has no foundation in fact.

The strongest recommendation of the national banking system is the protection it affords to those who deal with the banks, whether they be bill-holders, depositors, or other creditors. The bankers and stockholders have realized immense profits, and are doing so; they ought to be satisfied, and it is unwise to disturb those fundamental features of the law provided for the express purpose of protecting the public. There is no reasonable necessity for such change, and I trust it will not be made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. SARGENT in the chair.) The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.]

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 24, noes 9; no quorum voting.

Mr. BOREMAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at four o'clock and ten minutes p m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 27, 1874.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

GOVERNMENT ACCOUNTS AND RECORDS.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1556) to provide for the systematic and accurate keeping of public accounts on the part of the Government, to expedite auditing the same, and provide records for reference; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

RAILROAD FROM VICKSBURGH TO TEXAS.

Mr. MOREY, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on the Public Lands a bill (H. R. No. 1559) reviving a grant of lands to aid in the construction of a railroad from Vicksburgh, Mississippi, to the Texas State line; which was ordered to be printed, with the accompanying report, and recommitted, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

LAND TITLES IN MISSOURI.

On motion of Mr. HATCHER, by unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 1221) to confirm certain land titles in the State of Missouri, was taken from the Speaker's table, and the amendment of the Senate, striking out "Truedro" and inserting "Trudeau," was concurred in.

POST-ROUTE BILL.

Mr. STOWELL. I am instructed by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to report back the amendment of the Senate to a bill (H. R. No. 798) to establish certain post-routes, with the recommendation they be concurred in. The amendment of the Senate is only for the purpose of establishing other post-routes, and there is no legislation in the bill whatever except in reference to post-routes.

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

Mr. STOWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senate was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SOUTHERN TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. HOUGHTON. I ask unanimous consent to report back, from the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, a bill (H. R. No. 1557) to incorporate the Southern Transcontinental Railroad Company, and to grant the right of way through the public lands to the same, and to move that it be printed, and recommitted.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I do not object, if it be understood the bill is not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

Mr. HOUGHTON. Of course that is the understanding.

The bill was ordered to be printed and recommitted, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

GROWTH OF TIMBER ON WESTERN PRAIRIES.

Mr. DUNNELL, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 1558) to amend an act entitled "An act to encourage the growth of timber on the western prairies;" which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

IRRIGATION.

Mr. KASSON, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to communicate to this House a copy of all papers on irrigation contributed to the Commissioner of Agriculture, at his request, in the year last past, by George P. Marsh, minister of the United States in Italy.

UNITED STATES MINING RESOURCES.

Mr. TOWNSEND, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 670) supplemental to, and amendatory of, an act entitled "An act to promote the development of the mining resources of the United States," approved May 10, 1872; and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. RANDALL. I object, unless the bill be recommitted, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business being called for, the morning hour now begins at twenty minutes past twelve o'clock, and reports are in order from the Committee on Ways and Means.

MERCHANDISE IN BONDED WAREHOUSES.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Ways and Means to report a bill which I suppose, under the rules, will go to the Committee of the Whole; but as it is merely to correct a mistake, I ask the indulgence of the House to tell them what the mistake is before it goes there, and I think no one will then object to its passage. I now report from the Committee on Ways and Means a bill (H. R. No. 1560) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to reduce duties on imports, and to reduce internal taxes, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1873."

The bill was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, provides that section 3 of an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to reduce duties on imports, and to reduce internal taxes, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1873," be amended so as to read as follows:

SEC. 3. That foreign merchandise which arrived at a port of the United States on or before the 31st day of July, 1872, and upon which duties were not paid prior to August 1, 1872, though the same were not entered or transferred to a public store or bonded warehouse, shall be entitled to the benefits provided for in the eighth section of the act entitled "An act to reduce duties on imports, and to reduce internal taxes, and for other purposes," approved June 6, 1872, the same as such merchandise would have been entitled to had it actually been in public store or bonded warehouse on or prior to the 31st day of July, 1872: Provided, The owner of such merchandise shall, within thirty days from the passage of this act, make application therefor in writing, to the collector of the port at which such merchandise arrived.

The SPEAKER. The point of order will be suspended, if there be no objection, until the gentleman from Massachusetts makes his statement.

Mr. DAWES. When the tariff act of 1872 was passed it contained the usual provision, that goods in bonded warehouses, in the several ports of the United States, on the 31st day of August, when the bill took effect, should have the benefits of that bill. It so turned out upon that day there was in one or two ports of the United States quite a number of vessels, but the crowded condition of business at the custom-house was such, they could not get their cargoes technically into the bonded warehouse.

Last year a law was passed the intention of which was to give those that arrived at the port on that day, although not actually in the bonded warehouses, the benefit of the law of 1872 that they would have if they had actually been in the bonded warehouse.

The bill which so passed with that intention provided that they should have the benefit of section 2 of the tariff act, instead of having the benefit of section 8 of that act. Section 2 of the act was but one of the sections reducing and changing the tariff; so that it would turn out that only those particular articles in the cargo that were described in section 2 would have the benefit of the act. If it had been section 8 instead of section 2, it would have provided that all of a cargo that had reached the port, but had not actually got into the bonded warehouse on that day, should have the benefit of the act.

The act of last year is in the bill re-enacted in so many words, except substituting the eighth section for the second section. I think there can be no objection to the bill being passed.

There was no objection, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RECOVERY OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

Mr. FOSTER, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back the following resolution, with the recommendation that it do pass:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, directed to transmit to this House copies of all contracts made by the Treasury Department under authority to him given in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1873, and for other purposes," approved May 8, 1872, in the following words, namely:

"And from and after the passage of this act the Secretary of the Treasury shall have power to employ not more than three persons to assist the proper officers of the Government in discovering and collecting any money belonging to the United States whenever the same shall be withheld by any person or corporation, upon such terms and conditions as he shall deem best for the interests of the United States; but no compensation shall be paid to such persons except out of the money and property so secured; and no person shall be employed under the provisions of this clause who shall not have fully set forth in a written statement, under oath, addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury, the character of the claim out of which he proposes to recover, or assist in recovering, moneys for the United States, the laws by the violation of which the same have been withheld, and the name of the person, firm, or corporation having thus withheld such moneys; and if any person so employed shall receive or attempt to receive any money or other consideration from any person, firm, or corporation alleged thus to have withheld money from the United States, except in pursuance of the written contract made in relation thereto with the Secretary of the Treasury, such person shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $1,000 or imprisoned not less than two years, or both, in the discretion of any court of the United States having jurisdiction; and the person so employed shall be required to make report of his proceedings under such contract at any time when required to do so by the Secretary of the Treasury."

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DEPARTMENTAL TELEGRAPH LINES.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the bill (S. No. 89) in relation to the lines of telegraph connecting the Capitol with the various Departments of the Government, with two amendments proposed by the committee, and to ask its passage as amended.

The bill was read. It places under the supervision of the officer in charge of the public buildings and grounds the lines of telegraph constructed under and by virtue of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1873, entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874, and for other purposes;" and that officer is authorized and empowered to make rules and regulations for the working of said lines.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments proposed by the Committee on Appropriations.

The Clerk read the first amendment, as follows:

After the word "telegraph," in line 1, add the words "connecting the Capitol with the various Departments in Washington."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following:

And the Secretary of each Executive Department, and the Congressional Printer, are authorized to detail one person, from their present force of employés, to operate the instruments in said Department and Printing Office, and each House of Congress may provide for the employment of an operator in their respective wings of the Capitol, at a compensation not exceeding $100 per month during the sessions of Congress.

Mr. GARFIELD. At the suggestion of a gentleman near me, I desire to add to this amendment, after the word "Secretary," the words "or head." I believe the Attorney-General is not called a Secretary, but is the head of a Department; and the same is true of the Postmaster-General.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

The question was on ordering the bill, as amended, to be read a third time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman from Ohio will explain, if possible, the necessity for this measure. The appropriation of $8,000 last session for these lines of telegraph was manifestly a matter that was very imperfectly understood by the members on this floor. There seems to be no possible excuse for this expenditure; and it is very manifest from the amendments already made that the working of these wires from the Capitol to the various Departments of the Government is to be, not simply a source of considerable expense for the time being, but an expense that will grow and be very much increased. There seems no reason for this. I had hoped, inasmuch as a mistake was made in the beginning of this movement last session, in the first appropriation of $8,000; and inasmuch as it is not a necessary work for the transaction of public business between Congress and the Departments, that the Committee on Appropriations would have blocked this matter, which is the beginning of a new and extending source of expenditure.

Sir, we have had no trouble whatever in our intercourse with the Executive Departments, from the foundation of the Government to this time, without any such facility as this. It is very seldom that there is occasion for such extraordinary speed in communicating with the Departments. It seems to me remarkable, when we are seeking to reduce the expenses of the Government, that an agency for the mere convenience of gentlemen in the House and in the Senate, an agency very seldom called into requisition, should be made the subject of continued expenditure, and the creation of new offices with liberal salaries, when that expenditure could be lopped off without any conceivable embarrassment to the public service.

Sir, I shall indulge in no hopes of any substantial retrenchment and reform while such new agencies for expense as this are encouraged. It is simply a new mode by which the Treasury may be depleted. I trust this measure will not pass.

Mr. GARFIELD. The history of this measure is very simple. At the last session of Congress the Senate appended to the miscellaneous appropriation bill a provision that a line of telegraph, costing not more than $8,000 in the aggregate, should be built between the Capitol and the various Departments and between the Departments themselves. That amendment was agreed to by the House on the last night of the session, I believe, although I had not charge of the bill at that time. The telegraph, it was thought, would be a convenience for the rapid dispatch of business. Whether the measure was wise or otherwise is not now the question; the line has been built and is now in operation; but there is no law to provide for its management.

The Senate has passed a bill putting the management of this telegraph line in the hands of the officer in charge of the public buildings and grounds. That bill would probably carry with it the right of this officer to appoint operators for the several Departments and for the Capitol. When the bill came to the House it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. That committee was unwilling to allow eight or ten new offices to be created, and thus increase the expenses of the Departments. They therefore added an amendment to the bill, requiring the heads of the various Departments to detail some person already in the service to do this special duty of telegraphing. We found, on consultation with the heads of some of the Departments, that clerks who knew the business of telegraphing could be detailed temporarily to this duty, and without seriously interfering with their clerical duties. If this amendment be not adopted, the heads of Departments may pay out of their contingent funds for operators, in addition to their present force. It is plainly a measure of economy to pass this amendment.

It was not thought best to allow any one outside of Congress to control the appointment of operators for the House and the Senate, and the committee therefore provide that the operators for the Capitol building shall be employed under the direction of the two Houses. These are the only employés authorized by the bill, and the only expense authorized under it is the expense that will be incurred by employing two operators, at $100 a month each, for the session only. It is necessary to have this line under the control of somebody to keep it in repair, and to make rules and regulations as to the time the offices shall be open, &c.

Mr. W. R. ROBERTS. Do I understand that the only annual expense will be the pay of two operators?

Mr. GARFIELD. That is all that the bill provides for, except in so far as the detailing of clerks to do this duty at the several Departments may take them away from the work they would otherwise do.

Mr. W. R. ROBERTS. One other question. How much a year will the operation of this telegraph line require?

Mr. GARFIELD. It will require that there shall be one operator at each of the Departments and one at the Public Printing Office.

Mr. W. R. ROBERTS. No more?

Mr. GARFIELD. Yes; two at the Capitol.

Mr. W. R. ROBERTS. I was given to understand that it would eventually cost $12,000 a year to operate this line.

Mr. GARFIELD. I suppose it would, if we had a $1,000 operator at each of the Departments; but the amendment which the committee has proposed prevents the employment of any additional force in the Departments for this purpose, but requires that the work shall be done by detail, and done thus without any increase of force.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman explain the necessity for this telegraph?

Mr. GARFIELD. That is not now the question before the House. The line was established by a former Congress. It has been built, the offices are established, and it is in operation. I can see some advantages in it, certainly in our relations with the Departments and the Public Printing Office. Then we are constantly needing, for the transaction of our business, rapid communication with the Departments; and the Congress which established the line thought it important that it should be established. If it had not been done it would be an open question; but the work having been done, it is our plain duty to manage it as economically as possible.

I demand the previous question on the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered, being upon ordering the bill to a third reading.

The question was put; and on a division there were—ayes 63, noes 38; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays in the first instance. This is a bill to create a new source of annual expenditure.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 122, nays 118, not voting 46; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albert, Albright, Bass, Begole, Biery, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Amos Clark, jr., Clayton, Clinton L. Cobb, Stephen A. Cobb, Coburn, Crooke, Crounse, Crutchfield, Danford, Dawes, Donnan, Eames, Elliott, Farwell, Foster, Frye, Garfield, Gooch, Gunckel, Eugene Hale, Robert S. Hale, Hancock, Harmer, Benjamin W. Harris, Harrison, John B. Hawley, Joseph R. Hawley, Gerry W. Hazelton, John W. Hazelton, Hendee, Hersey, E. Rockwood Hoar, Houghton, Hubbell, Hurlbut, Hyde, Hynes, Kelley, Kellogg, Kendall, Lamport, Lansing, Lawrence, Lawson, Lewis, Loughridge, Lowe, Lowndes, Lynch, Marshall, Maynard, McCrary, Alexander S. McDill, James W. McDill, MacDougall, McJunkin, Mellish, Merriam, Monroe, Moore, Morey, Myers, Negley, Nunn, O'Neill, Orr, Orth, Packard, Page, Isaac C. Parker, Parsons, Phelps, Pierce, Pratt, Rainey, Ransier, Rice, Richmond, Ellis H. Roberts, James W. Robinson, Sawyer, John G. Schumaker, Henry J. Scudder, Isaac W. Scudder, Sener, Sessions, Shanks, Sheats, Sloss, Small, Smart, H. Boardman Smith, J. Ambler Smith, William A. Smith, Stephens, St. John, Stowell, Strawbridge, Sypher, Thomas, Thornburgh, Todd, Townsend, Tyner, Waddell, Wallace, Marcus L. Ward, Wheeler, White, Wilber, George Willard, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, and Woodworth—122.

NAYS—Messrs. Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Barnum, Barrere, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bradley, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Buffinton, Bundy, Burchard, Burleigh, Burrows, Caldwell, Cannon, Cessna, John B. Clark, jr., Clements, Clymer, Comingo, Conger, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Creamer, Crittenden, Crossland, Davis, Dunnell, Durham, Eldredge, Field, Fort, Giddings, Hamilton, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hatcher, Havens, Hays, Hereford, Herndon, George F. Hoar, Holman, Hunter, Hunton, Kasson, Killinger, Knapp, Lamar, Leach, Luttrell, Magee, Martin, McLean, McNulta, Milliken, Mills, Mitchell, Morrison, Neal, Nesmith, Niblack, O'Brien, Hosea W. Parker, Pelham, Pendleton, James H. Platt, jr., Potter, Randall, Rawls, Ray, Read, Robbins, William R. Roberts, James C. Robinson, Rusk, Henry B. Sayler, Milton Sayler, Scofield, Sherwood, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, A. Herr Smith, John Q. Smith, Southard, Speer, Sprague, Standeford, Stone, Storm, Strait, Swann, Taylor, Vance, Walls, Jasper D. Ward, Wells, Whitehead, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Charles W. Willard, William B. Williams, Willie, Ephraim K. Wilson, James Wilson, Wolfe, Wood, Woodford, and Pierce M. B. Young—118.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Averill, Barber, Barry, Cason, Freeman Clarke, Cotton, Crocker, Curtis, Darrall, De Witt, Dobbins, Duell, Eden, Freeman, Glover, Hathorn, Hooper, Hoskins, Howe, Jewett, Lamison, Lofland, McKee, Niles, Packer, Perry, Phillips, Pike, Thomas C. Platt, Poland, Purman, Rapier, Ross, Sheldon, George L. Smith, Snyder, Stanard, Starkweather, Tremain, Waldron, Whiteley, Charles G. Williams, Jeremiah M. Wilson, and John D. Young—46.

So the bill was ordered to a third reading.

Mr. BECK. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. JOHN D. YOUNG, is detained from his seat by sickness.

The bill was then read a third time.

The question was upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the bill be laid on the table; and on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GARFIELD. Take the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill, and that will save time.

The yeas and nays were ordered, there being 37 in the affirmative.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 113, nays 119, not voting 54; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Barrere, Beck, Begole, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bradley, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Buffinton, Burchard, Burrows, Caldwell, Cannon, Cessna, John B. Clark, jr., Clements, Clymer, Comingo, Cook, Corwin, Cotton, Cox, Creamer, Crittenden, Crossland, Davis, Dunnell, Durham, Eldredge, Field, Fort, Giddings, Hamilton, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Hatcher, Hays, Hereford, Herndon, George F. Hoar, Holman, Hunter, Hunton, Hyde, Kasson, Killinger, Knapp, Lamar, Leach, Luttrell, Magee, Martin, McLean, McNulta, Milliken, Mills, Mitchell, Morrison, Neal, Negley, Nesmith, Niblack, O'Brien, Hosea W. Parker, Pelham, Pendleton, James H. Platt, jr., Potter, Randall, Rawls, Ray, Read, Robbins, William R. Roberts, James C. Robinson, Henry B. Sayler, Scofield, Sener, Sherwood, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, A. Herr Smith, George L. Smith, John Q. Smith, Southard, Speer, Sprague, Standeford, Stone, Storm, Strait, Sypher, Taylor, Vance, Waddell, Whitehead, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Charles W. Willard, William B. Williams, Willie, Ephraim K. Wilson, James Wilson, Wolfe, and Pierce M. B. Young—113.

NAYS—Messrs. Albert, Albright, Averill, Barber, Bass, Biery, Bundy, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Clayton, Clinton L. Cobb, Stephen A. Cobb, Coburn, Conger, Crooke, Crounse, Crutchfield, Danford, Dawes, Donnan, Eames, Elliott, Foster, Freeman, Frye, Garfield, Gooch, Gunckel, Eugene Hale, Robert S. Hale, Harmer, Benjamin W. Harris, Harrison, John B. Hawley, Joseph R. Hawley, Gerry W. Hazelton, John W. Hazelton, Hendee, Hersey, E. Rockwood Hoar, Hooper, Houghton, Hubbell, Hurlbut, Hynes, Kelley, Kellogg, Kendall, Lamport, Lansing, Lawrence, Lawson, Lewis, Loughridge, Lowe, Lowndes, Lynch, Maynard, Alexander S. McDill, James W. McDill, MacDougall, Mellish, Merriam, Monroe, Myers, Nunn, O'Neill, Orr, Orth, Packard, Page, Isaac C. Parker, Parsons, Phelps, Pierce, Thomas C. Platt, Pratt, Rainey, Ransier, Rice, Richmond, Ellis H. Roberts, James W. Robinson, Ross, Sawyer, John G. Schumaker, Henry J. Scudder, Isaac W. Scudder, Sessions, Shanks, Sheats, Sloss, Smart, H. Boardman Smith, J. Ambler Smith, William A. Smith, Stephens, St. John, Stowell, Strawbridge, Thomas, Thornburgh, Todd, Townsend, Tyner, Waldron, Wallace, Marcus L. Ward, Wheeler, White, Whiteley, Wilber, George Willard, Charles G. Williams, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, Jeremiah M. Wilson, and Woodworth—119.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Barnum, Barry, Burleigh, Cason, Amos Clark, jr., Freeman Clarke, Crocker, Curtis, Darrall, DeWitt, Dobbins, Duell, Eden, Farwell, Glover, Hancock, Hathorn, Havens, Hoskins, Howe, Jewett, Lamison, Lofland, Marshall, McCrary, McJunkin, McKee, Moore, Morey, Niles, Packer, Perry, Phillips, Pike, Poland, Purman, Rapier, Rusk, Milton Sayler, Sheldon, Small, Snyder, Stanard, Starkweather, Swann, Tremain, Walls, Jasper D. Ward, Wells, Wood, Woodford, and John D. Young—54.

So the motion to lay on the table was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the passage of the bill.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. GARFIELD and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 90, noes 68.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. GARFIELD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the consideration of the contested-election cases from West Virginia, before proceeding with which the Chair will lay before the House certain executive communications.

KICKAPOO AND OTHER INDIANS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting an estimate of an appropriation for removing the Kickapoo and other roaming bands of Indians from Mexico to the Indian Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MISSION INDIANS OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary or the Interior, transmitting a report of the special agent appointed to visit the Mission Indians of Southern California, and recommending an appropriation for those Indians; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

MILITARY TELEGRAPH LINES IN ARIZONA.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, in relation to the want of a law affixing a penalty for tampering with the military telegraph lines in Arizona; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CLERKS, ETC., IN THE NAVY DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, in compliance with section 11 of the act of August 18, 1842, a list of clerks and other employés in the Navy Department; which was referred to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, and ordered to be printed.

GENERAL INDIAN COUNCIL.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting an estimate of appropriations required to defray the expenses of holding a general council of Cherokee, Creek, and other Indians, as provided by treaties with said Indians; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

BERWICK BAY, LOUISIANA.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, in answer to a resolution of the House of December 8, 1873, in relation to the examination of the channel in Berwick Bay, at the mouth of the Atchafalaya River, in the State of Louisiana; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

SURVEY OF INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting an estimate of an appropriation required to defray expenses incident to the survey of Indian reservations during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CROW TRIBE OF INDIANS.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, in relation to an agreement concluded with the Crow tribe of Indians, in accordance with the act of April 23, 1872; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

EXAMINATION OF RIVERS AND HARBORS.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting certain reports of the examination of rivers and harbors under the act of March 3, 1873; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

RAILROAD BRIDGE AT DAVENPORT, IOWA.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, in relation to the removal of the north pier of the old railroad bridge of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad at Davenport, Iowa; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

RUSH VALLEY MILITARY RESERVATION.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, in relation to the disposition of the Rush Valley military reservation, Utah Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

WHITE EARTH INDIAN RESERVATION, MINNESOTA.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a draught of a bill to secure eighty acres of land on the White Earth reservation of the Chippewa Indians, in Minnesota, to the Episcopal Board of Missions; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

WAR ACCOUNTS OF THE STATES.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a statement showing amounts due to or overdrawn by the several States on January 22, 1874, under the law for arming the militia; also the annual report of the Chief of Ordnance for the year ending June 30, 1871; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CONNECTION BETWEEN LAKE HURON AND LAKE ERIE.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in answer to a resolution of the House of December 18, 1873, in relation to an estimate of the expense of deepening and widening the navigable channel of the river connecting Lake Huron and Lake Erie.

Mr. HOLMAN. That should be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BASS. It should go to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the Committee on Commerce is the proper committee.

Mr. BASS. The resolution comes from the Committee on Railways and Canals.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks this subject is before the Committee on Commerce in the general river and harbor bill.

Mr. BASS. The resolution in pursuance to which this report was sent in came from the Committee on Railways and Canals.

The SPEAKER. Then the information should go to that committee.

The letter was referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals, and ordered to be printed.

YELLOW FEVER.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in answer to a resolution of the House of January 13, 1874, transmitting a report of the Surgeon-General concerning the epidemic of yellow fever in the United States in 1873; which, on motion of Mr. NEGLEY, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, in answer to a resolution of the House of January 21, 1874, transmitting reports in relation to the Union Pacific Railroad; which was referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, and ordered to be printed.

STURGEON BAY AND LAKE MICHIGAN SHIP-CANAL.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in relation to the route of the Sturgeon Bay and Lake Michigan Ship-Canal; which, on motion of Mr. CONGER, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. PENDLETON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (S. No. 61) providing for busts of the late Chief Justices Roger Brooke Taney and Salmon Portland Chase to be placed in the Supreme Court Room of the United States; when the Speaker signed the same.

OCEAN COURSES FOR STEAM-VESSELS.

Mr. NEGLEY, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be directed to inquire into the expediency of securing by international law more stringent regulations prescribing ocean courses for inward and outward passages of steam-vessels in crossing the North Atlantic or other foggy latitudes, with authority to report by bill or otherwise.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. GARFIELD, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1561) to reduce the expenditures on public buildings; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

JACOB PARMENTER.

Mr. WHEELER, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1562) for the relief of Jacob Parmenter, reimbursing him for defending a suit brought against him for an official act; which was read a first and second time, referred, with the accompanying papers, to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF SAN FRANCISCO HARBOR.

Mr. CLAYTON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1563) making appropriation to improve the entrance to the harbor of San Francisco; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

WEST VIRGINIA ELECTION CASES.

The House resumed the consideration of the following resolutions, reported from the Committee on Elections:

Resolved, (first,) That Mr. Davis, claiming to have been elected a Representative in the Forty-third Congress from the first congressional district of West Virginia, was not duly elected, and is not entitled to a seat in this House.

Resolved, (second,) That Mr. Hagans, claiming to have been elected a Representative in the Forty-third Congress from the second congressional district of West Virginia, was not duly elected, and is not entitled to a seat in this House.

Resolved, (third,) That Mr. Wilson, claiming to have been elected a Representative in the Forty-third Congress from the first congressional district of West Virginia, was elected upon the day lawfully prescribed for the election of Representatives in Congress in the State of West Virginia, and is hereby admitted to a seat in this House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] is entitled to twenty-five minutes.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, had the committee in this case, with any considerable degree of unanimity, agreed upon a report, I should have followed the rule I have always estabiished for myself in such matters, to have voted with the committee; but there has been so much diversity of opinion that I have felt compelled to examine the matter for myself. And I now desire to state to the House the conclusions to which I come, rather in the hope, if I am wrong, I may be corrected, than of adding anything to the stock of knowledge of the House; for the legal proposition it seems to me is so clear, that finding myself at variance with other gentlemen for whose talents, acumen, and ability I have the highest possible respect, I am led myself to doubt the conclusions I have come to, although I have come to them with such clear conviction.

If the House will indulge me, I propose simply to state the case as I understand it. By the constitution of 1863 West Virginia, as a State, fixed the election day on the fourth Thursday of October. The Legislature, doing exactly what the constitution allowed them to do, no more and no less, for they could fix no other general-election day except that which the constitution gave them the right to fix, followed the constitution, and made all the requisite machinery for carrying out a general election. Now, what is a general election? I take it a general election is an election where the whole State is called upon to vote for the entire State officers that set the machinery of the State government in motion. There may be district officers, there may be subordinate officers at other elections, or at a general election. But I think it a contradiction of terms to say that is not a general election at which the governor and all other great State officers are elected. The Legislature of West Virginia then undertook to deal with what was within their constitutional province, and not within the province of a convention—to fix, under the Constitution of the United States, when members of Congress should be elected. They, then, having that right, and in view of economy of time as well as expense, and to prevent a multiplicity of elections, determined that members of Congress should be elected on the day fixed for a general election, naming the day, but saying in addition that should be the day of the general election.

While matters stood thus, and there was no dispute, a constitutional convention was duly authorized by the Legislature of the State. That constitutional convention framed a new constitution, which they submitted to the people on the 22d day of August, and by express terms made that constitution and the schedules accompanying it to take effect on the morning of that day, if ratified by the people. On the same day they required all the great State officers, all the principal officers of the State, to be elected at a general election, in which all the people were to participate, in which all were to have an opportunity to participate, and great interests being involved of a nature to call everybody out.

Now you will observe that the new constitution fixes a fresh day of general election—that is, a day of general election when all the great officers of State were to be voted for. The Legislature had fixed that members of Congress were to be voted for on the day of general election. Now, I suppose that nobody will doubt that it was a sufficient compliance with the constitutional provision that the Legislature of a State shall fix the time, place, and manner of an election, if the Legislature should say that the election of members of Congress should be held on the day of the general election, and in the manner that other great State officers are voted for. Having done that, then, what is the effect of the constitutional provision, if ratified by the people? Why, it is to fix that day of general election. Then the Legislature have fixed that members of Congress are to be voted for on that day. And there would seem to be no doubt in the mind of anybody as to the coming together of the two provisions; because the constitution abrogated every legislative provision under the old constitution inconsistent with itself—that is, inconsistent with the constitution. But this fixing the election of members of Congress on this day was not inconsistent with the new constitution, but entirely consistent with and following it.

Thereupon an election was held upon that day. Now, clearly, on the fourth Thursday of October there could be no election, because that day was fixed by the constitution, and the new constitution abrogated that day—ended it. If the Legislature fixed forty days for the general election under the old constitution, they were all to be abrogated by the effect of the new constitution.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I do not mean to speak at much length, and do not like to have my argument disturbed. But I will yield to the gentleman, at the same time saying that I do not care to be interrupted again.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I am in hopes of getting from the gentleman what I have failed to get from any other gentleman who has spoken on that side of the question—a frank statement as to when the constitution and the code left the election of district officers to take place next fall and in all future time. Are not district officers left to be elected on the fourth Thursday of October, as they have been heretofore?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. To that I answer, that as I do not believe that in any sense of the word, under the constitution of West Virginia—which has nothing on earth to do with the election of members of Congress—the "district officers," also provided for by this constitution, mean members of Congress, I would answer my friend by saying that that is entirely an immaterial question. I am speaking of a day of general election.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. But district officers are provided for in the code.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I agree that district officers are provided for in the code, and if that provision was inconsistent with the provisions of the new constitution, there was an end of it. The new constitution fixes the second Tuesday of October in the future—after the machinery of the State government had been set in operation by the election of all the great State officers and members of Congress, if I am right, on the 22d August—fixes the second Tuesday of October, which in itself would be, in my judgment, an abrogation of all other days.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. Only for State and county officers and members of the Legislature.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Very well, sir; then suppose that this was a casus omissus in the constitution, admit that for the purpose of argument, yet it does not affect this question. There are many things frequently omitted which require legislation to settle them.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. Omitted in the code?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Omitted in the code.

Now I ask that I may not be further interrupted. No man can keep up a continuous line of thought in the face of continuous interruptions. And I certainly cannot.

Now, my answer to all that about district officers is this: that it is wholly laid aside unless the House comes to the conclusion that members of Congress are named and determined by the constitution in the term "district officers," when there are other officers called district officers, such as assessors, inferior magistrates, and others who are named as district officers in the constitution.

But the point—let me restate it, as I have been interrupted—the point, in my judgment, is just here: the Legislature had provided that at the general election members of Congress should be elected. The constitution came in and decided, being adopted by a vote of the people, that on the 22d of August there should be a general election in the sense in which I have used the term, and on that day there was an election held by common consent. All parties held their conventions, made their nominations, carried on their canvass, and did all the acts that men ever do at an election, in reference to that day.

One objection was made to this, and I listened with great care to the gentleman who made it, and it was that that day was not fixed for the election because it would have been retroactive, and nobody could have told whether any election had been held on that day or not until after the votes were counted and declared. Sir, the difficulty with that objection is that it proves too much; for if it is a good objection to the election, then there is no government in the State of West Virginia at all; no election was held on that day, and nobody has been elected in the State. That is hardly to be assumed on so slight a ground.

Now, if I am right on this point, there seems to me to be an end of the case; and seeing it exactly in that light I have not been able to appreciate, perhaps, as much as I ought the arguments opposed to it. It is determining in my mind.

I have listened in vain for any statement that prior to the 22d of August anybody set up any claim that the election on that day was not a regular election. I have not seen it stated in the newspapers, nor have I heard it anywhere, that until the time the votes were counted and declared any man in West Virginia said an election for members of Congress could not be held on that day. On the contrary, I understand that all parties held conventions in reference to an election on that day.

Mr. TODD. The fact is that in the second congressional district both parties called congressional conventions, and after deliberating both adjourned, agreeing that August was not the proper time to hold the election, and no nomination was made by either party.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I cannot say how that is; it does not appear in any of the reports.

Mr. SPEER. I beg the gentleman's pardon; it is expressly stated in the report signed by three members of the committee.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. I beg to say that that is disputed by parties who claim that the convention was adjourned, not on that ground but for another reason, to be called together by its chairman; so that matter is in dispute.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. We will leave out the second district for a moment and take the first. I am informed by gentlemen of the committee who are much more familiar with the case than I am that there was a matter of dispute about the conventions in the second district, but in the first district there was no dispute. Well, then, the people went on and elected; and there was a claim of election on the side of the party now seeking to set aside the election. It was supposed at first that he was elected, and the cock crowed upon it in his favor, and nobody suggested that there was anything wrong; but when the returns from the mountain districts came in there was a change, and then the cock crew no longer, but it was said the election was all wrong; let us go over it again.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. Peter denied his master after the cock crew.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. My friend who is so well versed in Scripture suggests to me that it was not until after the cock crew that Peter denied his Master. Pardon me; he did it before, and then the cock crew shame on him because he denied his Master. [Laughter.] However that may be, sir, nobody put in a claim that the election was illegal up to that time.

Now, I look on all the machinery of holding elections as only the means by which the people can find out who are elected, and by which Congress is to be taught; and when we have ascertained that there was a fair election we throw aside the machinery. Those of us who are old enough to remember the case, remember that in the great broad-seal case of New Jersey the House threw aside the whole machinery of election, and took the affidavits of the voters of the State as to how the election was carried on in order to instruct itself whether there was a fair election without force or fraud, and, if so, who got a majority at that election. Therefore, I am constrained on this point to sustain the views of the minority of the committee headed by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. HAZELTON.]

I cannot conceive that any one can stand on the proposition that there was an election on the fourth Thursday of October at all. I think that was but an after-thought; and if there was not a legal election held on the 22d of August then there has been no election, and no day fixed for an election, in West Virginia.

Then, sir, there is another consideration, and it is this: The constitutional convention must have had all this in mind; the people must have had all this in mind. Congress was to meet on the first Monday in December, and their Legislature was not to meet within any time so that it could fix a day for any election, if a day had to be fixed anew. The Legislature was to meet at the beginning of November, and that would not have left time for a canvass, and hardly time for a notification of the election, in an extended territory with slight means of communication like West Virginia. And yet I am not instructed that the Legislature of West Virginia, coming together on the first Tuesday of November, did fix any day. They assumed that it had been fixed, and when they came together they fixed no day. Therefore if there was no election on the 22d day of August, there could possibly be no election to this Congress, and the people must be unrepresented here; because, as I say, I cannot conceive that there can be supposed to be a legal election at a general election, when there was no general election on the day abrogated by the high legislative authority of the State, the people acting in their representative capacity through their constitutional convention, and afterward ratifying that constitution by a deliberate vote.

There is but one other consideration which I desire to present, and then I will not further trouble the House. Gentlemen make a distinction between the cases from the first and second district. Pardon me; I think it would be a most dangerous precedent for us to set, after we come to the conclusion that the 22d of August was the legal day of election, if we say that we will set aside an election on that legal day upon the supposition that all did not vote who wanted to vote, or if we should interpose our fiat and say that the people did not express themselves as they ought to have done. I say that would be a most dangerous precedent; and rather than set such a precedent I would let in one man wrongfully, although in this case I do not think the man I would let in would be let in wrongfully.

I have observed that wherever we have a Committee on Elections, and a very large majority on one side of the House, then that Committee on Elections—I do not speak of the present one alone, as I have seen it now for six or eight years—I have observed that that Committee on Elections is always so afraid that we cannot be considered judicial minded that they always cast all doubts against our own side. When it is a close House, then the majority always come up to the party lines. But if there is a large majority in the House then there are some men who want to make for themselves a judicial reputation, and they look about to see if they cannot find some way to unseat a member of the majority. The minority always does its duty; they never fail, whether it is our minority, or your minority; they always stand by their friends. And if they can get two or three of these judicial-minded gentlemen of the Committee on Elections to join with them, then there is a majority report on the minority side of the House. So afraid are they that we shall not stand up straight that they lean a little the other way. That is almost a necessity of the human mind.

Now, these are the questions which I think must be determined: Did the people understand that on the 22d day of August they were voting at a general election? Was there a general election held on that day? And did these men claiming seats here because of that election receive a fair majority of the votes then cast? If they received a majority, it must be taken to be a majority of the whole vote that would be cast; because the moment we go into balanced Houses, and into high party times, when the lines are strictly drawn, where will you find yourselves? You will find that because one man has not got so many votes as he ought to have, you will set aside his election, because other men might have come out if they had known about it, or upon some other pretext. I therefore beseech parties on both sides of the House, in the interest of fair play and of the people hereafter, that you will not unseat a man if he was elected on the regular day of election, when the people have voted, and when he has received a fair majority of the votes thrown, and nobody was by foul play or fraud prevented from voting.

Thanking the House for their attention, I do not think I can add anything to what I have said.

[Mr. SPEER addressed the House. His remarks will appear in the Appendix. At the conclusion of his speech he yielded the floor to Mr. HALE, of New York.]

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I hope the gentleman from New York will yield to me for one moment for the purpose of inquiring what is the prospect of closing this debate? I think the House is as sick of it as it can possibly be of anything.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I will state, in reply to the gentleman from Virginia, that after the gentleman from New York is through, and possibly one short speech of ten or fifteen minutes afterward, I propose to call the previous question. I understand the gentleman from New York only desires to occupy a short time.

Mr. HALE, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I have no intention to enter upon any lengthy discussion of the question before the House in the West Virginia election case. I have no desire to engage in a general argument of the question. I have no desire to persuade my fellow-members upon the floor to change their own views and conform them to mine. In passing upon a subject of this character I have but one way of regarding it—as a judicial question, to be judicially determined by each man on his own judgment upon the law and the facts. I propose simply to state, briefly and pointedly as I may, the exact grounds of my own action in the case, which I hope will be a fair judicial action on my part.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. BUFFINTON in the chair.) Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania give up the floor, or yield the remainder of his hour to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. HALE, of New York. I did not understand I was speaking in the time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but that I took the floor in my own right. The gentleman from Pennsylvania resumed his seat, and the Chair then recognized me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will so decide; and the gentleman from New York will proceed.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I do not propose, however, to take an hour.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I begin with the proposition that, in my judgment, the first section of the code of West Virginia, of 1869, I think it was, does not cover the case of members of Congress; that the provision in that section, that the general election of State, district, county, and township officers, and members of the Legislature shall be held on the fourth Thursday in October, is not a provision which in its terms covers members of Congress; that they are not district officers in any proper sense, in any sense within the purview of the Legislature which passed this act, and they are not included in that first section.

Then we come to the second section, and what is the fair purport of that section? Let us look at this section, not technically by the laws of grammar or by the refinements of a technical legal construction here, but to the intent of the Legislature in the enactment of the second section of this code. The first section had provided for a general election throughout the State, at which substantially all elective officers were to be chosen. Now the purport of this section, as it seems to me the fair and ordinary purport, is simply this: at the general election provided for in the first section of this act, the following specific officers shall be elected, including as well those who are named in the first section as others who are not named there. The fair intent of the Legislature was to say that those officers, including members of Congress, should be elected at the general election; and that is a proper and lawful prescribing of the time of election within the provision of the Constitution of the United States. That Constitution says the Legislature shall prescribe the time of electing members of Congress. This does not necessarily involve the naming of the day of the month or of the day of the week. Cannot the time be prescribed except by such naming of the day? I insist, that fixing the time by reference to another event of the natural world or to the constitutional law of the State, is a perfect and valid fixing of the time. If, instead of naming a certain Thursday in October as the day of the election, the Legislature had seen fit, after the fashion of churches, to designate it as Easter is designated, or as the first Thursday following a certain full moon in October, I apprehend it will not be questioned that would be a valid fixing of the time within the Constitution. So, too, if the Legislature had simply said members of Congress shall be elected on the day of general election of State and county officers, that would have been a valid fixing of the time; and that, in my judgment, is the purport of this second section of the code—no more and no less. I take its legal effect to be precisely as if its operation had been confined to members of Congress alone, and had contained this simple provision, that members of Congress shall be elected in each district at the general State election.

Now, it has been argued strenuously that where the Constitution of the United States intrusts to the State Legislature a power for fixing the time, that Legislature cannot delegate that authority thus conferred, and empower some other body to fix the time. Well, grant that in its fullest extent, and does it follow that Legislatures cannot refer to the constitutional law of their States for determining the time which they will fix? To-day, as the law of West Virginia stands, the election of members of Congress shall be on the day of the general election of State officers, and that day is the fourth Thursday of October. The statute, of course, fixes the fourth Thursday of October by fixing the day of the general election. To-morrow the constitution of the State is altered by constitutional power, and the day of the general election is transferred from the fourth Thursday of October to the fourth Thursday of August, or the second Tuesday of October—either of them. Can there be a question that under such a statute, under that change of constitution, the day fixed by the Legislature changes with the day of general election fixed by the constitutional power? Is that a delegation of the power of legislation? It seems to me clearly not. So far, therefore, as the power of the constitution of West Virginia is concerned to control the day of general election of State officers, and so far as concerns the power of the Legislature of the State to determine the day of the election of members of Congress solely by hinging it upon, as it has been called, the day of general election, I can see no possible occasion for questioning it. It strikes me that it is fully, completely, absolutely, and unquestionably within the province of the Legislature, through the power given to it by the United States Congress, and to have been precisely the practice adopted in many States of the Union.

Then we come next in order to the question, did the constitution of West Virginia change the time of the general election and carry with it by its own force the election of members of Congress? Well, now, as to that it seems to me there can be no possible question. The constitution of West Virginia was adopted on the 22d of August, 1872. With the vote of the people of that State on that day that constitution became the supreme law of the State then; and that constitution contained a provision that the general election of State and county officers and members of the Legislature should be held on the second Tuesday of October until otherwise provided by law. By the constitutional provision the statute establishing the fourth Thursday of October was annulled utterly; no general election was thereafter to be held on the fourth Thursday of October in any year. If, therefore, no other day was designated by competent authority, the second Tuesday of October became and was in 1872 the day for the general election, including the election of members of Congress. It would seem not a little absurd to suppose that, in violation of the whole line of policy by which the State of West Virginia had uniformly insisted upon members of Congress being elected at the time of the general election of the State and county officers at the time when the fullest vote of the people would be elicited, when the fullest expression should be given to their wishes, that, abandoning that policy, they had intended in the adoption of their new constitution to provide for the general election on the second Tuesday of October, leaving to stand, as a fractional part of a statute abrogated in all other respects, a separate election of members of Congress on the fourth Thursday of October.

Those gentlemen who claim seats in this House by reason of the election on the fourth Thursday in October must stand on this technicality, a technicality plainly inconsistent with the whole scheme of elections, as expressed through the whole history of legislation in West Virginia; and not only that, but plainly a technicality not apprehended by the majority of the people of the State, for it rests upon elections which are insignificant—absolutely insignificant—as to the number of those participating in them. In districts containing an average of some twenty-five or twenty-six thousand voters, one member comes here claiming to have been elected at the October election by some three or four thousand votes, and the other, if I remember rightly, by some six or seven thousand. That shows the practical construction placed upon the argument of the majority of the committee by the majority of the citizens of West Virginia, in construing their own laws and the constitution.

Then, Mr. Speaker, we come back to the question as to the August election. An election was held on the fourth Thursday of August in that year, and gentlemen present themselves here claiming seats upon this floor as having been regularly elected at that election. Now, I say with entire frankness that I would be glad to see a way by which I could lawfully, and in conformity with my own judgment, cast a vote to recognize the validity of that election—at least in the first district of the State of West Virginia; for there is a strong equity in favor of a man who claims a seat upon this floor, and who comes here upon credentials showing that, whether elected legally and according to the strict letter of the law or not, he was elected at an election in which the body of the voters of his district took part—an election fairly conducted and severely contested, and with everything that could characterize his election as one made in good faith by the majority of the voters of his district. If I could see any way to sustain that election in the case of the first district, I certainly should do it; but it does appear to me that there are here insuperable difficulties in the way of sustaining that election.

Let us look for a moment at the import of the provision of the Constitution of the United States and the objects which it sought to attain in providing that the Legislature of a State should prescribe the time of election of members of Congress. Plainly the first thing to attain was full and ample notice to all the electors that they should be advised legally of the time when the election was to be held, and of their rights in regard to the election. It was to fix that time absolutely, so that when it came the majority of the voters of each district should be able to determine finally and by one ballot who was to represent them in Congress.

I have said I do not believe it must of necessity be done by naming the day. It might be done by referring to any other day in relation to natural events, or in relation to the provisions of the State constitution which would make it fixed and certain. They have provided, as I have said, in substance that the election should be held on the day of the general election of State and county officers. That day could be changed by constitutional enactment, but—and here I come to the point which I confess I find myself unable to get over—could it be changed, not certainly, not absolutely, but conditionally, contingently upon something else, by a body whose authority itself was or was not to be a valid authority, according as it might be validated or not by a vote of the people thereafter? I take it that no man on this floor contends that if the people of West Virginia had rejected the amended constitution, this would have been a valid election of members of Congress on that day. The constitution rejected, the general election fell with it; the officers of the State elected at that election were not elected, and it follows of necessity that the members of Congress voted for on the same day could not have been lawfully elected. Was it the intent of the framers of the Constitution of the United States that any body of men, even a constitutional convention, high in authority as it may be, should have it in their power to provide for an election which should be valid or invalid solely according to the determination of some other event, to be settled by that same election? Was it intended that the seats of members in this House should be determined by an election which was to be an election provided somebody or something else was elected at the same time, and if that somebody or something else was not elected at the same time it should be no election?

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. I desire to ask the gentleman a question. Is it not true that in the case of California, and something like a dozen other States, members of Congress have been elected under precisely the same circumstances, and have been allowed to take their seats?

Mr. HALE, of New York. I understand it to be true that in many cases—I cannot specify them; but that repeatedly—in the organization of new States from Territories, and in the reorganization of certain communities in the South which had once been States, and which are now States, but which at a certain time were certainly not States in their normal relations to the Union, these things have been done.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Where do you distinguish between those cases and this?

Mr. HALE, of New York. That is what I am coming to. It was permitted in each of the cases, usually from the argument of necessity and convenience, and from the absence of any State Legislature which could have prescribed in advance.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. The gentleman will permit me to ask him one question right there, because I think this point is the point in this whole case. Is it true that in these sixteen or eighteen cases Congress acted under the necessity of the case? Would it not have been perfectly easy to have required the Legislatures of those States, when elected, to have fixed a future time for electing members of Congress? Was it not done on the ground, which applies to this case as well as it did to those, that where to the people of the State is submitted the question of adopting their organic law, of electing all the officers who are to set it in motion and act under it, an election of members of members of Congress at the same time by a vote of the people who adopt the constitution, secures substantially the constitutional provision, to wit, an expression of the will of the people at a time when, necessarily, their vote will be fullest; and does it not apply to a case where an old State adopts a new constitution just as much as it applies to a case where a reconstructed State or a new State adopts its first constitution? In other words, are not these sixteen or eighteen cases of precedents, precedents for this case?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Can necessity dispense with the constitution?

Mr. SMITH, of New York. Let me ask one question.

Mr. HALE, of New York. Mr. Speaker, when these gentlemen are through I will go on with my argument. My friend from Massachusetts [Mr. G. F. HOAR] clearly, from the length of his question, did not expect a categorical answer.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I did.

Mr. HALE, of New York. Well, he certainly misjudges; for I cannot answer by "yes" or "no" so elaborate a question as the gentleman put. But I will endeavor to express my views on the question, as I was proceeding to do when I was interrupted.

I did not say, Mr. Speaker, that the adoption of the practice of recognizing members from the Territories first forming State constitutions, or from Southern States when reorganizing after the end of the rebellion, arose from necessity; I said it arose from fancied necessity or convenience, and in view of the fact that there had been no Legislatures which had the power to prescribe any time whatever. I think I see most clearly and distinctly the difference between the action of Congress and the principle established by the action of Congress in those respects, and the principles applicable to the case of West Virginia. Here is a case where the time for holding the election has been fixed by the very body authorized by the Constitution of the United States to fix it. The Legislature of the State has acted, and has named the day on which members of Congress shall be chosen. I submit to the House whether the case of a State fully organized, with acts of its Legislature in force, with a day of election prescribed by the Legislature pursuant to the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, does not stand on a little different footing from the case of a Territory coming here for the first time, or a disorganized State coming here again for reorganization under general or special acts of Congress.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Not on questions of power.

Mr. HALE, of New York. Yes, I think even on questions of power. It never could have been intended that where this power of legislation has been once exercised it was to be superseded, as I said, by a mere experimental vote on a different day, not fixed by any authority whatever, and that to become valid only upon another event happening which should make it valid.

So much upon the question of the law applicable to this case. Now, a single word upon another branch of the subject. I hold that to entitle any man to a seat in this House two things should be requisite.

First, an election according to law. No matter how distinct or unequivocal an expression of the people may be had, if it is an expression outside of the law it is one this House cannot take into account. In the case of the election in the first district of West Virginia there would seem to be every reason to believe that there was a fair expression of the people, and that that expression designated Mr. Davis as the man entitled to a seat in this House. But if we come to the conclusion that the law of West Virginia under the Constitution of the United States did not authorize that election, we might just as well take the poll of voters in a bar-room, or in a church, as to take the poll of voters at the precincts of West Virginia on that day.

And the counterpart of that proposition is also true. Not only should the election be according to law, but it should be according to a law so certain, so clear in its provisions, so commending itself to the judgment and understanding of the constituency of the district as to be reasonably expected to elicit a fair vote of the constituency. Now, I do not claim that the mere fact of a vote being light is to be taken into account in determining the validity of an election. But given the case of an election for members of Congress, where every man who looks at the question must see that reasonable doubt may exist where it is evident that legislation, hasty and ill-advised, had left the question in a muddle, and where it is plain from the vote itself that the constituency, as a mass, did not recognize the legal validity of the election upon that day, then I submit that no man elected under such circumstances could, by a vote insignificant in numbers, become entitled to a seat here.

Therefore, if nothing else stood in the way, I would be unwilling to seat either of the gentlemen elected at the October election upon the floor of this House. Of course, believing as I do that that election was entirely null according to the law, it is unnecessary to go further. If I believed that that election was perhaps technically a legal election according to law, and at the same time believed that the law was not so expressed as to carry to the constituency itself the conviction that that was the legal day of election, I certainly would vote against seating either of the gentlemen claiming seats under such an election.

The same reason precisely would preclude me from voting to admit the member from the second district who claims a seat under the August election, because it is plain that in that district the constituency of the district did not accept that as the legal day of election. I insist that the elections of members of this House should be not only according to law, technically and rigidly, but they should be under a law so reasonably certain, and so recognized by the constituency as the law, as to make it a substantial election, indicating substantially the choice of the constituency; and not a mere form, having in it no substance except the expression of the wishes of an insignificant minority.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question right here?

Mr. HALE, of New York. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The gentleman does not believe that the October election was a legal one. And if the August election falls, what will the gentleman do with the gentleman on the other side [Mr. HEREFORD] who was elected at both elections?

Mr. HALE, of New York. His case is not before the House. I do not know what were the credentials he has presented here.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. He presented credentials from the governor as having been elected at both elections.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I think if this House has admitted any man to a seat in it, upon two certificates of contingent election, neither of which is of itself sufficient to sustain his claim to a seat, and both of which when taken together are found invalid, then this House has certainly committed a great mistake. How it is to rectify that mistake it is not for me to say. That, however, is not the case now before the House.

I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. G. F. HOAR.]

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I wish to state, and I think I can do so in three minutes, what seems to me to be the turning-point in this case. It is true that every House is the final judge of the qualification and election of its own members. It is also true that every supreme court is the final judge in every case which is submitted to it. But in both cases that judgment is a judgment which is constrained by authority, which is affected by precedent, and governed by its own and other precedents in like cases.

Now, I understand that this case is settled by the precedents of this House, and by the precedents in like cases in the State Legislatures, that where the people of a State adopt a new organic law, or the people of a new State adopt a constitution and begin a new political life, and under that new constitution choose their State officers, and at the same election, and as a part of the same transaction, elect members of this House, the validity of the three being submitted to the people who are alone concerned, by a question, on the affirmative or negative decision of which depends the validity of the whole, this House recognizes that solemn act of the people of the State, and admits their Representatives so chosen. It has done it in the case of every new State with scarcely an exception since the Constitution was formed. It has done it in the case of several of the old States readmitted after the separation occasioned by the rebellion. This action has not been taken, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. SMITH] seemed to think, because of the necessity of the case. There is no necessity in such cases. We may properly and rightly require that after a new State is formed its Legislature shall prescribe the time at which, in future, Representatives in Congress shall be elected; or after an old State is readmitted we may require that its Legislature shall prescribe the time for such election. It is not because of any necessity that these precedents have been established. It is because by such action everything that the Constitution and law require is in substance and in fact gained. An election by the people at a time when they are exercising another, a solemn and important act of sovereignty, when they are sure to be at the polls in largest numbers—an election, too, affirmed to be valid by their vote adopting a constitution, with all its consequences, by the only authority interested, the people to be represented, is an election deserving the highest respect from this House.

The grounds on which these precedents rest, the reasons which have led to their establishment, are applicable and cogent in every case (whether it be the case of an old or a new State) in which the people adopt a new government, by that solemn and original act of sovereignty anterior to and overcoming all law—the solemn vote of the people themselves.

I followed the gentleman from New York [Mr. HALE] with great pleasure in his clear statement until he came to his last proposition, in taking which, I must say, I think he has not carefully considered the bearings of the question. He seemed to think that these precedents depended upon a certain necessity which does not exist.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that we have but one alternative. We must either declare this August election valid, (and it is the last case which can arise under any act of a State Legislature, because in 1876 the act of Congress fixing a uniform day for congressional elections will go into operation,) or we must hold that this election, depending for its validity on the solemn act of the people of West Virginia, is, with all the action of that day, invalid and unconstitutional the result of which will be not only to send away two gentlemen who are applicants here as having been elected on that day, but also that we must at once introduce a resolution to unseat the gentleman representing the third district, Mr. HEREFORD, whose election depends upon precisely the same principle.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. If my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. G. F. HOAR] will allow me, I wish to ask him whether the precedents to which he alludes have not been uniformly and without exception put by the Committee on Elections upon the ground of necessity.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. No, sir. It may have happened in some cases that the Committee on Elections, without much consideration, may have given assent to such a view; but it is by no means true that uniformly and without exception the precedents have been placed on such a ground. It cannot be true. The supposed necessity does not, in fact, exist.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the motion to recommit the pending resolutions; I renew the motion as to the first and third resolutions; and upon the second and fourth resolutions I call the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair directs the reading of the resolutions reported by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, (first,) That Mr. Davis, claiming to have been elected a Representative in the Forty-third Congress from the first congressional district of West Virginia, was not duly elected, and is not entitled to a seat in this House.

Resolved, (second,) That Mr. Hagans, claiming to have been elected a Representative in the Forty-third Congress from the second congressional district of West Virginia, was not duly elected, and is not entitled to a seat in this House.

Resolved, (third,) That Mr. Wilson, claiming to have been elected a Representative in the Forty-third Congress from the first congressional district of West Virginia, was elected upon the day lawfully prescribed for the election of Representatives in Congress in the State of West Virginia, and is hereby admitted to a seat in this House.

Resolved, (fourth,) That Mr. Martin, claiming to have been elected a Representative in the Forty-third Congress from the second congressional district of West Virginia, was elected upon the day lawfully prescribed for the election of Representatives in Congress in the State of West Virginia, and is hereby admitted to a seat in this House.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. On behalf of the minority of the committee I desire to move an amendment, as follows:

Strike out all of the first and second resolutions after the word "resolved," and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That Benjamin Wilson, who claims a seat in this House as Representative from the first congressional district of West Virginia, and B. F. Martin, who claims a seat in this House as Representative from the second congressional district of West Virginia, are not entitled to a seat therein.

Strike out all of the third and fourth resolutions, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Resolved, That John J. Davis, who claims a seat in this House as Representative from the first congressional district of West Virginia, is entitled to such seat.

Resolved, That J. Marshall Hagans, who claims a seat in this House as Representative from the second congressional district of West Virginia, is entitled to such seat.

The SPEAKER. To which of the resolutions reported by the committee does the gentleman from New York [Mr. SMITH] wish the previous question to attach?

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I call the previous question on the second and fourth resolutions.

The SPEAKER. The second resolution is that which declares Mr. Hagans not entitled to a seat, and the fourth is that which declares Mr. Martin entitled to a seat.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. I desire to ask a parliamentary question. If the House should refuse to second the demand for the previous question, can I then obtain a vote on my amendments?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. SMITH] admit the amendments of the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. HAZELTON?]

Mr. SMITH, of New York. No, sir.

The SPEAKER. Should the House refuse to second the previous question on the motion of the gentleman from New York, it will then be the duty of the Chair to recognize the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I desire to state that the House will be afforded an opportunity to vote upon the question of the admission of Mr. Hagans, and to recommit the subject as to the admission of Mr. Martin.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to know whether the effect of the motion now made by the chairman of the Committee on Elections [Mr. SMITH, of New York] will be to bring the House to a vote upon the question as to the second district before voting upon the first district.

The SPEAKER. That is the effect.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I trust the House will not reverse the proper and natural order of voting.

The SPEAKER. The tellers will take their places, and the House will divide on seconding the demand for the previous question.

Mr. TODD. I desire to ask my colleague on the committee to withdraw his demand for the previous question so I may offer a substitute.

The SPEAKER. It cannot be done unless by unanimous consent, as the House is dividing.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 71, noes 118.

So the previous question was not seconded.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. I move to amend the proposition before the House, and then demand the previous question.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of the first and second resolutions after the word "resolved," and insert as follows:

That Benjamin Wilson, who claims a seat in this House as Representative from the first congressional district of West Virginia, and B. F. Martin, who claims a seat in this House as Representative from the second congressional district of West Virginia, are not entitled to a seat therein.

Strike out the second and third resolutions, and insert as follows:

Resolved, That John J. Davis, who claims a seat in this House as Representative from the first congressional district of West Virginia, is entitled to such seat.

Resolved, That J. Marshall Hagans, who claims a seat in this House as Representative from the second congressional district of West Virginia, is entitled to such seat.

Mr. SPEER. Is not the first resolution divisible, involving, as it does both the claimants from West Virginia?

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. I demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. That can be as well settled after the previous question as before.

Mr. TODD. I ask the gentleman from Wisconsin to allow me to offer an amendment.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. I decline to yield.

Mr. SPEER. What becomes of my point?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will rule on the point afterwards.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. SPEER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division of the first resolution, so the House may be able to vote separately on the claims of each of the claimants for seats. I understand such has been the uniform ruling of the Chair in previous cases, that each claimant is entitled to have his case separately voted on.

The SPEAKER. That has been the uniform ruling of the Chair, and it could not be otherwise.

Mr. SPEER. The Chair has always been fair in these cases.

The SPEAKER. It could not be otherwise. The rights of one member to a seat cannot be complicated or compromised by those of any other.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. We have no objection to that course being pursued.

Mr. SPEER. How will the question before the House be put?

The SPEAKER. The first amendment is on striking out all of the first and second resolutions after the word "resolved," and inserting. Striking out and inserting may be divided. The Chair will therefore put the question on striking out. The first question is to strike out all after the word "resolved" in the first resolution, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Mr. Davis, claiming to be a Representative in the Forty-third Congress from the first congressional district of West Virginia, was not duly elected, and is not entitled to a seat in this House.

The SPEAKER. The proper way would be to strike out and insert. The question will be put so the House may vote intelligibly.

Mr. SPEER. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Why not wait and have the yeas and nays on inserting?

Mr. SPEER. I do not care to have the yeas and nays on striking out if I can have them on inserting.

The SPEAKER. Then the question will be upon striking out the name of Davis and inserting that of Wilson.

Mr. SPEER. That will suit me.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Let us have the words read that we are to strike out.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Why not strike out the word "not," and it will accomplish the purpose gentlemen have in view.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the question, and he desires the Committee on Elections to take notice that the resolutions and amendments are in somewhat unusual form, and hence the complication which is caused is the fault of the committee reporting them.

Mr. CESSNA. I suggest that the gentleman from Wisconsin move to strike out the word "not."

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will move to strike out the word "Davis" and insert "Wilson" it will bring the House to a vote, and that will make the House declare Mr. Wilson was not elected.

Mr. KASSON. That will declare that Mr. Wilson is elected. I wish to say the first resolution reported from the committee is all right by striking out the word "not." It will answer the purpose, and give us an affirmative instead of a negative vote. I hope that course will be taken.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. I do not object to that. I wish the question to be voted on intelligibly.

The SPEAKER. What form does the gentleman wish it put in?

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. I move to strike out the word "not" in the first resolution.

Mr. ELDREDGE. That will put some members of the House in an embarrassing position, because there may be some who, while they think Mr. Davis was not elected, do not think Mr. Wilson was.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin proposes to obviate that by bringing the House to vote on the proposition to strike out the word "not."

Mr. SPEER. What is the form of the resolution now?

The SPEAKER. The committee's report is that Mr. Davis, claiming to have been elected a Representative in the Forty-third Congress from the first congressional district of West Virginia, was not duly elected, and is not entitled to a seat in this House. And the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HAZELTON] proposes to strike out the word "not," and thereby bring the House to a direct vote on the question whether Mr. Davis was duly elected or not.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. It is necessary to strike out the word in two places.

The SPEAKER. Of course. The resolution as it stands is that Mr. Davis was not duly elected and is not entitled to a seat.

Mr. SPEER. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. MELLISH. I would like to have the resolution read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again read the resolution as reported by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows.

Resolved, That Mr. Davis, claiming to have been elected a Representative in the Forty-third Congress from the first congressional district of West Virginia, was not duly elected, and is not entitled to a seat in this House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves to strike out the two "nots." And the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPEER] demands that the question shall be taken by yeas and nays.

Mr. LAMAR. I wish now to know the effect of the vote about to be taken.

The SPEAKER. The effect of the vote will be, if affirmative, that the resolution will be thus amended, and the question will next be on adopting the resolution, as amended, by the House; that is, by striking out the word "not" where it occurs in two places. The resolution, if thus amended, will be submitted as amended to another vote. The two votes are tantamount to one another, and that will seat Mr. Davis, if the majority vote that way.

The question being put on ordering the yeas and nays, there were—ayes 48.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 147, nays 82, not voting 57; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albert, Albright, Averill, Barber, Barrere, Begole, Biery, Buffinton, Bundy, Burchard, Burleigh, Burrows, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Cannon, Cessna, Amos Clark, jr., Clayton, Clinton L. Cobb, Stephen A. Cobb, Coburn, Conger, Corwin, Crounse, Crutchfield, Danford, Darrall, Dobbins, Donnan, Duell, Dunnell, Eames, Elliott, Field, Fort, Foster, Frye, Gooch, Gunckel, Eugene Hale, Benjamin W. Harris, Havens, John B. Hawley, Joseph R. Hawley, Gerry W. Hazelton, John W. Hazelton, Hendee, Hersey, E. Rockwood Hoar, George F. Hoar, Hoskins, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurlbut, Hynes, Kasson, Kelley, Kellogg, Kendall, Lamport, Lansing, Lawrence, Lawson, Loughridge, Lowe, Lynch, Magee, Martin, Maynard, McCrary, Alexander S. McDill, James W. McDill, MacDougall, McJunkin, Mellish, Merriam, Monroe, Morey, Myers, Nunn, O'Neill, Orr, Orth, Packard, Page, Isaac C. Parker, Parsons, Pelham, Pendleton, Pierce, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, Ransier, Rapier, Ray, Rice, Richmond, Robbins, Ellis H. Roberts, James W. Robinson, Ross, Rusk, Sawyer, Henry B. Sayler, Sener, Sessions, Shanks, Sheats, Sheldon, Sherwood, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Small, Smart, A. Herr Smith, George L. Smith, William A. Smith, Snyder, Sprague, St. John, Stowell, Strait, Strawbridge, Sypher, Taylor, Thornburgh, Townsend, Tyner, Waddell, Waldron, Wallace, Jasper D. Ward, Marcus L. Ward, Wheeler, White, Whiteley, Wilber, Charles W. Willard, George Willard, Charles G. Williams, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, James Wilson, and Jeremiah M. Wilson—147.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Barnum, Bass, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bradley, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Caldwell, John B. Clark, jr., Clymer, Cook, Cox, Creamer, Crittenden, Crooke, Crossland, Davis, Durham, Eldredge, Giddings, Glover, Hamilton, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, Hereford, Herndon, Holman, Hunton, Hyde, Lamar, Lamison, Luttrell, Marshall, McLean, Milliken, Morrison, Neal, Nesmith, Niblack, Hosea W. Parker, Perry, Poland, Randall, Read, William R. Roberts, James C. Robinson, Milton Sayler, H. Boardman Smith, Southard, Speer, Standeford, Stone, Storm, Swann, Thomas, Todd, Vance, Wells, Whitehead, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, William B. Williams, Willie, Ephraim K. Wilson, Wolfe, Wood, Woodford, and Pierce M. B. Young—82.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Archer, Barry, Cason, Freeman Clarke, Clements, Comingo, Cotton, Crocker, Curtis, Dawes, DeWitt, Eden, Farwell, Freeman, Garfield, Robert S. Hale, Hancock, Harmer, Hathorn, Hays, Hooper, Houghton, Howe, Jewett, Killinger, Knapp, Leach, Lewis, Lofland, Lowndes, McKee, McNulta, Mitchell, Moore, Negley, Niles, O'Brien, Packer, Phelps, Phillips, Pike, Potter, Rawls, John G. Schumaker, Scofield, Henry J. Scudder, Isaac W. Scudder, Sloss, J. Ambler Smith, John Q. Smith, Stanard, Starkweather, Stephens, Tremain, Walls, Woodworth, and John D. Young—57.

So the amendment was agreed to.

During the vote the following announcements were made:

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I am paired on this question with my colleague, Mr. JEWETT. If he were here he would vote "no," and I would vote "ay."

Mr. HAYS. I am paired on this question with Mr. KNAPP. If he were here he would vote "no," and I would vote "ay."

Mr. CLEMENTS. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. EDEN, who is detained from the House by sickness. If he were here he would vote "no," and I would vote "ay."

Mr. KELLOGG. My colleague, Mr. STARKWEATHER, is absent on account of sickness in his family. He is paired with Mr. HALE, of New York. If Mr. STARKWEATHER was present he would vote "ay," and Mr. HALE "no."

Mr. LOWNDES. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. ARCHER. If here he would vote "no," and I would vote "ay."

Mr. CESSNA. My colleague, Mr. KILLINGER, desires me to state that he is absent by reason of sickness.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. SPEAKER. The question recurs, will the House agree to the resolution as amended? the effect of which is to seat Mr. Davis.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. On that question I demand the yeas and nays.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays there were ayes 33—not a sufficient number.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I call for tellers on ordering the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. YOUNG of Georgia, and Mr. HAZELTON of Wisconsin, were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 50.

So the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote, the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 134, nays 82, not voting 70; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albert, Albright, Averill, Barber, Barrere, Begole, Biery, Buffinton, Bundy, Burchard, Burleigh, Burrows, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Cannon, Cessna, Amos Clark, jr., Clayton, Clinton L. Cobb, Stephen A. Cobb, Conger, Corwin, Crounse, Crutchfield, Danford, Darrall, Dobbins, Donnan, Duell, Dunnell, Eames, Elliott, Field, Fort, Foster, Frye, Gooch, Gunckel, Benjamin W. Harris, Havens, John B. Hawley, Joseph R. Hawley, Gerry W. Hazelton, John W. Hazelton, Hendee, Hersey, E. Rockwood Hoar, George F. Hoar, Hubbell, Hunter, Hurlbut, Hynes, Kelley, Kellogg, Lamport, Lansing, Lawrence, Lawson, Loughridge, Lowe, Lynch, Magee, Martin, Maynard, McCrary, Alexander S. McDill, James W. McDill, MacDougall, McJunkin, Mellish, Merriam, Monroe, Moore, Morey, Myers, Nunn, Orr, Packard, Page, Isaac C. Parker, Parsons, Pendleton, Pierce, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, Ransier, Rapier, Ray, Richmond, Robbins, Ellis H. Roberts, James W. Robinson, Ross, Rusk, Sawyer, Henry B. Sayler, Sener, Shanks, Sheldon, Sherwood, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Small, Smart, A. Herr Smith, George L. Smith, William A. Smith, Sprague, St. John, Stowell, Strait, Strawbridge, Sypher, Taylor, Thornburgh, Townsend, Tyner, Waddell, Waldron, Wallace, Jasper D. Ward, Marcus L. Ward, Wheeler, White, Whiteley, Wilber, Charles W. Willard, George Willard, Charles G. Williams, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, James Wilson, and Jeremiah M. Wilson—134.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Barnum, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bradley, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Caldwell, John B. Clark, jr., Clymer, Cook, Cox, Creamer, Crittenden, Crooke, Crossland, Curtis, Davis, Durham, Eldredge, Giddings, Glover, Hamilton, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, Hereford, Herndon, Holman, Houghton, Hunton, Hyde, Lamar, Lamison, Luttrell, Marshall, McLean, McNulta, Milliken, Mills, Morrison, Neal, Niblack, Hosea W. Parker, Perry, Poland, Randall, Read, Rice, William R. Roberts, James C. Robinson, Milton Sayler, H. Boardman Smith, Snyder, Southard, Standeford, Stone, Storm, Swann, Thomas, Todd, Vance, Wells, Whitehead, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, William B. Williams, Ephraim K. Wilson, Wolfe, Wood, Woodford, and Pierce M. B. Young—82.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Archer, Barry, Bass, Bright, Cason, Freeman Clarke, Clements, Coburn, Comingo, Cotton, Crocker, Dawes, DeWitt, Eden, Farwell, Freeman, Garfield, Eugene Hale, Robert S. Hale, Hancock, Harmer, Hathorn, Hays, Hooper, Hoskins, Howe, Jewett, Kasson, Kendall, Killinger, Knapp, Leach, Lewis, Lofland, Lowndes, McKee, Mitchell, Negley, Nesmith, Niles, O'Brien, O'Neill, Orth, Packer, Pelham, Phelps, Phillips, Pike, Potter, Rawls, John G. Schumaker, Scofield, Henry J. Scudder, Isaac W. Scudder, Sessions, Sheats, Sloss, J. Ambler Smith, John Q. Smith, Speer, Stanard, Starkweather, Stephens, Tremain, Walls, Willie, Woodworth, and John D. Young—70.

So the resolution was adopted.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. KASSON. I desire to state that I am paired upon this question with Mr. WILLIE, of Texas, who would have voted "no," while I would have voted "ay."

Mr. CLEMENTS. I desire to state that I am paired upon this question with my colleague, Mr. EDEN. If he were here he would vote "no," and I would vote "ay."

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. On this question I am paired with my colleague, Mr. JEWETT. If he were here he would vote "no," and I would vote "ay."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. JOHN J. DAVIS then appeared and qualified, by taking the oath prescribed by the act of July 2, 1862.

Mr. COBURN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the House refused to adjourn.

The question recurred upon agreeing to the second resolution reported by the Committee on Elections; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, (second,) That Mr. Hagans, claiming to have been elected a Representative in the Forty-third Congress from the second congressional district of West Virginia, was not duly elected, and is not entitled to a seat in this House.

The SPEAKER. The same amendment is pending to this resolution that was offered to the other one, to strike out the word "not" where it occurs.

Mr. SPEER. On that amendment I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 119, nays 88, not voting 80; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albert, Albright, Averill, Barber, Barrere, Begole, Biery, Buffinton, Bundy, Burchard, Burleigh, Burrows, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Cannon, Cessna, Amos Clark, jr., Clayton, Stephen A. Cobb, Conger, Corwin, Crutchfield, Danford, Darrall, John J. Davis, Dobbins, Donnan, Duell, Dunnell, Elliott, Foster, Freeman, Frye, Gooch, Gunckel, Benjamin W. Harris, Havens, John B. Hawley, Gerry W. Hazelton, John W. Hazelton, Hersey, E. Rockwood Hoar, George F. Hoar, Hubbell, Hunter, Kelley, Lamport, Lansing, Lawrence, Lawson, Lowe, Lynch, Martin, Maynard, McCrary, Alexander S. McDill, James W. McDill, MacDougall, McJunkin, Merriam, Monroe, Morey, Myers, Nunn, Page, Isaac C. Parker, Parsons, Pelham, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, Ransier, Rapier, Ray, Richmond, Robbins, Ellis H. Roberts, James

W. Robinson, Ross, Rusk, Sawyer, Henry B. Sayler, Sessions, Shanks, Sheats, Sheldon, Sherwood, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Small, A. Herr Smith, George L. Smith, William A. Smith, Snyder, Sprague, St. John, Stowell, Strait, Strawbridge, Sypher, Taylor, Thornburgh, Townsend, Tyner, Waldron, Wallace, Jasper D. Ward, Marcus L. Ward, Wheeler, Whiteley, Wilber, George Willard, Charles G. Williams, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, James Wilson, and Jeremiah M. Wilson—119.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Barnum, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bradley, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Caldwell, John B. Clark, jr., Clements, Clymer, Coburn, Cook, Cox, Crittenden, Crooke, Crossland, Curtis, Alexander M. Davis, Durham, Eldredge, Giddings, Glover, Eugene Hale, Hamilton, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, Joseph R. Hawley, Hereford, Herndon, Holman, Hunton, Hurlbut, Hynes, Kellogg, Lamar, Lamison, Luttrell, Magee, Marshall, McLean, McNulta, Mellish, Milliken, Mills, Morrison, Neal, Niblack, Hosea W. Parker, Perry, Poland, Randall, Read, William R. Roberts, James C. Robinson, Milton Sayler, Sener, H. Boardman Smith, J. Ambler Smith, John Q. Smith, Southard, Speer, Standeford, Stone, Swann, Todd, Vance, Whitehead, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Charles W. Willard, William B. Williams, Ephraim K. Wilson, Wood, Woodford, and Pierce M. B. Young—88.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Archer, Barry, Bass, Cason, Freeman Clarke, Clinton L. Cobb, Comingo, Cotton, Creamer, Crocker, Crounse, Dawes, DeWitt, Eames, Eden, Farwell, Field, Fort, Garfield, Robert S. Hale, Hancock, Harmer, Hathorn, Hays, Hendee, Hooper, Hoskins, Houghton, Howe, Hyde, Jewett, Kasson, Kendall, Killinger, Knapp, Leach, Lewis, Lofland, Loughridge, Lowndes, McKee, Mitchell, Moore, Negley, Nesmith, Niles, O'Brien, O'Neill, Orr, Orth, Packard, Packer, Pendleton, Phelps, Phillips, Pierce, Pike, Potter, Rawls, Rice, John G. Schumaker, Scofield, Henry J. Scudder, Isaac W. Scudder, Sloss, Smart, Stanard, Starkweather, Stephens, Storm, Thomas, Tremain, Waddell, Walls, Wells, White, Willie, Wolfe, Woodworth, and John D. Young—80.

So the amendment was agreed to.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. GIDDINGS. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. WILLIE, is absent on account of sickness; if here he would vote "no."

Mr. HALE, of New York. On this question and all others relating to the validity of the August election, I am paired with Mr. STARKWEATHER; he would vote "ay," and I would vote "no."

Mr. PACKARD. I am paired with my colleague Judge WOLFE; if he were here he would vote "no," and I would vote "ay."

Mr. LOWNDES. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. ARCHER; he would vote "no," and I would vote "ay."

Mr. THOMAS. On this motion I am paired with my colleague, Mr. COBB; if he were here he would vote "ay," and I would vote "no."

Mr. HEREFORD. I am requested to state that Mr. WELLS is paired with Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. Mr. LOUGHRIDGE would have voted "ay," and Mr. WELLS "no."

Mr. HENDEE. I desire to say that I am paired on this question with Mr. RICE, of Illinois. If he were here he would vote "no," and I should vote "ay."

Mr. PRATT. I desire to state that on this question Mr. ORR, my colleague, is paired with Mr. HYDE, of Missouri. If present Mr. ORR would vote "ay," and Mr. HYDE "no."

Mr. SMART. I am paired with Mr. STORM, of Pennsylvania, who, if present, would vote "no," and I would vote "ay."

The question was on the resolution as amended.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. SPEER. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. RANDALL. Would it be in order now to enter a motion to reconsider the order for the previous question?

The SPEAKER. It would not, as it has been partially executed.

The yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn were not ordered, but 19 voting in favor thereof.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon adopting the resolution as amended.

Mr. HEREFORD. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered—ayes 41, noes not counted.

Mr. W. R. ROBERTS. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Is that motion in order?

The SPEAKER. The House has ordered the yeas and nays to be taken on the resolution as amended, and that the Chair would rule to be sufficient transaction of business to make the motion to adjourn in order.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

Mr. KELLOGG. I ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HAZELTON] to yield to have read a substitute for this resolution.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. I have no right to yield.

Mr. SPEER. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. If this resolution should fail, would it then be in order to move a substitute to remit this case back to the State of West Virginia?

The SPEAKER. If this resolution should fail, there are the third and fourth resolutions reported from the committee to be acted upon, and they would probably afford the gentleman an opportunity to accomplish what he desires. If this resolution, as amended, should be adopted, that will seat Mr. Hagans.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 115, nays 75, not voting 97; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albert, Albright, Averill, Barber, Barrere, Begole, Biery, Buffinton, Bundy, Burchard, Burleigh, Burrows, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Cannon, Cessna, Amos Clark, jr., Clayton, Stephen A. Cobb, Conger, Corwin, Crutchfield, Curtis, Danford, Darrall, Dobbins, Donnan, Duell, Dunnell, Elliott, Foster, Freeman, Frye, Gooch, Gunckel, Benjamin W. Harris, Havens, John B. Hawley, Gerry W. Hazelton, John W. Hazelton, Hersey, E. Rockwood Hoar, George F. Hoar, Hubbell, Hunter, Kelley, Lamport, Lansing, Lawrence, Lawson, Lowe, Lynch, Martin, Maynard, McCrary, Alexander S. McDill, James W. McDill, MacDougall, McJunkin, Merriam, Monroe, Myers, Nunn, Page, Isaac C. Parker, Parsons, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Pratt, Purman, Rainey, Ransier, Rapier, Ray, Richmond, Robbins, Ellis H. Roberts, James W. Robinson, Ross, Rusk, Sawyer, Henry B. Sayler, Sessions, Shanks, Sheldon, Sherwood, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Small, A. Herr Smith, George L. Smith, William A. Smith, Snyder, Sprague, St. John, Stowell, Strait, Strawbridge, Sypher, Taylor, Thornburgh, Townsend, Tyner, Waldron, Wallace, Jasper D. Ward, Marcus L. Ward, Whiteley, Charles W. Willard, George Willard, Charles G. Williams, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, James Wilson, and Jeremiah M. Wilson—115.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Arthur, Ashe, Banning, Barnum, Bass, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bradley, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Caldwell, Clymer, Coburn, Cook, Cox, Crittenden, Crooke, Crossland, Alexander M. Davis, Durham, Eldredge, Giddings, Glover, Eugene Hale, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, Joseph R. Hawley, Hereford, Holman, Hunton, Kellogg, Lamar, Lamison, Luttrell, Magee, Marshall, McLean, McNulta, Milliken, Mills, Morrison, Neal, Perry, Poland, Randall, Read, William R. Roberts, James C. Robinson, Milton Sayler, Sener, H. Boardman Smith, J. Ambler Smith, John Q. Smith, Southard, Speer, Stone, Swann, Todd, Vance, White, Whitehead, Whitthorne, Wilber, William B. Williams, Ephraim K. Wilson, Woodford, and Pierce M. B. Young—75.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Archer, Atkins, Barry, Buckner, Cason, John B. Clark, jr., Freeman Clarke, Clements, Clinton L. Cobb, Comingo, Cotton, Creamer, Crocker, Crounse, John J. Davis, Dawes, De Witt, Eames, Eden, Farwell, Field, Fort, Garfield, Robert S. Hale, Hamilton, Hancock, Harmer, Hathorn, Hays, Hendee, Herndon, Hooper, Hoskins, Houghton, Howe, Hurlbut, Hyde, Hynes, Jewett, Kasson, Kendall, Killinger, Knapp, Leach, Lewis, Lofland, Loughridge, Lowndes, McKee, Mellish, Mitchell, Moore, Morey, Negley, Nesmith, Niblack, Niles, O'Brien, O'Neil, Orr, Orth, Packard, Packer, Hosea W. Parker, Pelham, Pendleton, Phelps, Phillips, Pierce, Pike, Potter, Rawls, Rice, John G. Schumaker, Scofield, Henry J. Scudder, Isaac W. Scudder, Sheats, Sloss, Smart, Stanard, Standeford, Starkweather, Stephens, Storm, Thomas, Tremain, Waddell, Walls, Wells, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Willie, Wolfe, Wood, Woodworth, and John D. Young—97.

So the resolution, as amended, was adopted.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made:

Mr. HEREFORD. I desire to state that Mr. WELLS, of Missouri, is paired with Mr. LOUGHRIDGE, of Iowa. If present Mr. WELLS would vote "no," and Mr. LOUGHRIDGE "ay."

Mr. HYNES. I desire to state that I am paired with Mr. MOREY, of Louisiana, who, if present, would vote "ay," and I would vote "no."

Mr. THOMAS. I again announce that I am paired with my colleague, Mr. COBB, who, if present, would vote "ay" on this resolution, and I would vote "no."

Mr. SMART. On this resolution I am paired with Mr. STORM, of Pennsylvania, who, if present, would vote "no," and I would vote "ay."

Mr. PACKARD. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. WOLFE; if here he would vote "no," and I would vote "ay."

Mr. HAYS. I am paired with Mr. KNAPP, of Illinois; if present he would vote "no," and I would vote "ay."

Mr. POLAND. I have been requested by my colleague, Mr. HENDEE, to state that he is paired on this question with Mr. RICE, of Illinois; if present my colleague would vote "ay," and Mr. RICE would vote "no."

Mr. SPEER. I move that the House now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from West Virginia, Mr. HAGANS, is present, he is entitled to be sworn in, and to vote on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. HAGANS then came forward and was sworn in, taking the oath prescribed by the act of July 2, 1862.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. I move that the two remaining resolutions reported from the Committee on Elections be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion of Mr. SPEER was then agreed to; and (at six o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred, as follows:

By Mr. AVERILL: The petition of Helen M. Stansberry, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BASS: The petition of the East Presbyterian church of Buffalo, New York, signed by its pastor and other officers, for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Also, the remonstrance of hat manufacturers of Buffalo, against the extension of the Wells patent, to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. BROMBERG: The petition of the Boards of Trade of Columbus, Mississippi, and Mobile, Alabama, for the survey of a canal to connect the Tennessee and Tombigbee Rivers, to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

By Mr. BUNDY: The remonstrance of hat manufacturers of Portsmouth, Ohio, against the extension of the Wells patent, to the Committee on Patents.

Also, the petition of citizens of Vinton County, Ohio, for the prepayment of postage on all printed matter, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. CESSNA: Several petitions from citizens of Franklin County, Pennsylvania, for the repeal of the second section of the act of June 6, 1872, to the Committee on Patents.

Also, the petition of the Presbytery of Allegheny, Pennsylvania, and other church communicants, for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CLAYTON: The memorial of the Legislature of California, for the improvement of the harbor of Crescent City, to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, resolutions of the Legislature of California, for the removal of the wreck of the ship Patrician, and the rock known as the Noonday Rock, near the entrance to the harbor of San Francisco, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. CROOKE: The petition of John Britton and other citizens of Brooklyn, New York, for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DANFORD: The petition of James W. Barnes, for the removal of the charge of desertion, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DUELL: The petition of James Byers, George W. Griggs, and John Nolen, for relief, to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DUNNELL: Several petitions from citizens of Minnesota, for an amendment of the law to encourage the growth of forest trees on western prairies, to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. FRYE: Several petitions of citizens of Brooklyn, New York, for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HANCOCK: The petition of A. C. Keaton, for relief, to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HARMER: The petition of Adam Warthman, for relief, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HAZELTON, of New Jersey: The petition of citizens of Camden County, New Jersey, for the repeal of section 2 of the act of June 6, 1872, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. KELLEY: Several petitions of citizens of Philadelphia, for the repeal of section 2 of the act of June 6, 1872, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LOWE: The petition of James W. Huff, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, the petition of settlers on the Osage lands, in Kansas, for relief, to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. LOWNDES: The petition of George R. Murphy, grandson and heir of Isaac Murphy, in regard to the French spoliation claims, to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. McCRARY: The petition of Orson Young, of Burlington, Iowa, for a penson, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, the petition of Peter J. Knapp, for relief, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McDILL, of Wisconsin: The petition of citizens of Wisconsin, for additional duty on hops, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. McJUNKIN: The petition of Barbara Ellen Walters, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MYERS: The petition of Wilmer W. Bradley, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. NEGLEY: The petition of citizens of Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, for the repeal of the second section of the act of June 6, 1872, which reduces the duties on certain staple commodities 10 per cent., to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, the petition of M. Walsh and other employés of the Pennsylvania Salt Manufacturing Company, of similar import, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. O'BRIEN: The petition of Emily L. Slaughter, widow of the late Commander A. G. Slaughter, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ORR: The petition of John Cleghorn, late receiver of the land office at Sioux City, Iowa, for relief, to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. POTTER: The petition of citizens of Chappaqua, New York, for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SMART: The petition of William L. Robinson, of New York, for relief, to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SMITH, of North Carolina: The petition of citizens of Chapel Hill, North Carolina, for the payment of the claim of the Southern Methodist publishing house at Nashville, Tennessee, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SMITH, of Ohio: The petition of citizens of the third congressional district of Ohio, for the settlement of international difficulties by arbitration, to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. SMITH, of Virginia: The petition of citizens of Hanover and Louisa Counties, Virginia, for the establishment of a post-route from Villa Green to Factory Mills, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. SWANN: The remonstrance of hat manufacturers of Baltimore against the extension of the Wells patent, to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. TOWNSEND: The petition of the Kennett Monthly Meeting of the religious society of Friends, of Chester County, Pennsylvania, asking Congress to provide for the appointment of a commission of inquiry to inquire as to the results of the traffic in alcoholic liquors in connection with crime, pauperism, the public health, and the moral, social, and intellectual well-being of the people, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, the petition of Edward Crowther and 46 other citizens of Chester, in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the repeal of the second section of the act of June 6, 1872, which made a reduction of 10 per cent. in certain duties, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. TYNER: The petition of Thomas Gargins, late a drummer in Company E, Eighth Indiana Volunteers, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. VANCE: The petition of citizens of Shelby County, North Carolina, for the payment of the claim of the Southern Methodist publishing house at Nashville, Tennessee, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WARD: The petition of Mrs. Mary Jane Sears, for a pension, to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and War of 1812.

By Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont: The petition of Cornelius H. Forbes, for compensation for loss of a horse in the military service of the United States, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WILSON, of Iowa: The petition of J. V. Dennis, for arrears of pay, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, the petition of Ezra Owen, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 28, 1874.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 1560) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to reduce duties on imports, and to reduce internal taxes, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1873," was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. STOCKTON presented concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of New Jersey, in favor of the passage of the bill making provision "for arming and equipping the whole body of the militia of the United States, and for other purposes;" which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHERMAN presented four petitions of citizens of Ohio, who were soldiers in the late war, or are the heirs of such, praying to be granted one hundred and sixty acres of land, for the equalization of bounties, and for the amendment of the pension laws; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petition of E. M. Dennison, praying for increase of compensation, as court crier, from April, 1863, to December, 1865; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SCOTT presented a petition of citizens of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, praying for the redemption or conversion of the legal-tender notes, by issuing therefor, at the option of the holder, bonds payable on demand in legal-tender notes and bearing interest at some fixed rate, and suggesting 3.65 per cent. per annum; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, presented the petition of Linn E. Sherman, president, B. J. Kendall, and other officers and members of the Vermont Pharmaceutical Association, praying the repeal of the stamp tax imposed by the internal-revenue laws on medicines, as detailed in schedule C of the code, stating that it is no longer necessary as a source of pecuniary revenue; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAMERON presented twelve petitions of, and signed by, 947 citizens of Pennsylvania, praying Congress to devise some means to settle international disputes without a resort to war; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CONKLING. I present three petitions, signed by a large number of soldiers, stating that they were soldiers for the Union in the late war of the rebellion; that they believe they are entitled to one hundred and sixty acres of land; and they ask the appointment of a special committee to investigate the workings of existing laws touching these questions, in order that justice may be done. I move the reference of these petitions to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING presented a memorial of the National Board of Trade, for the removal of obstructions to navigation now existing at and near the mouth of the Detroit River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of Mark Brumagim, a citizen of New York, praying for the enactment of a law establishing a free gold-banking system; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ANTHONY. I present the petition of Charles L. Anthony, George Opdyke, and others, of New York, asking for a modification of the laws which govern the relations of masters and owners of vessels and seamen, representing that in cases where seamen bring suits for cruelty the witnesses scatter very soon, and that such cases ought to have precedence in time in the courts; also, that in cases where damages are awarded to seamen for cruelty they should be a lien upon the ship. This petition is signed in the way in which the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] thought petitions ought to be signed, in which I fully concur with him; each man has put his residence opposite to his name.

In moving the reference of this petition to the Committee on Commerce, I beg to call the attention of that committee to the suggestions of the memorialists upon a subject which I know has engaged its earnest consideration: the protection, the elevation, and the improvement of the sea-faring portion of our population.

It is a melancholy fact that the character of this important class has greatly deteriorated, and property and human life on the seas, always imperiled by the elements, are thus subjected to additional and needless danger.

I remember the time when young men of good education and good prospects in life shipped before the mast, that they might learn practical navigation, and qualify themselves to become mate and master of vessels. Then the forecastle of an Indiaman was largely occupied by steady, intelligent, self-respecting men; then the captain of a ship would feel the mortification of being charged with cruelty to his men as keenly as though he were charged with cruelty to his family.

How all this has been changed, everybody knows; how sailors are shipped, how they are treated when shipped; how they conduct themselves under such treatment, how the brutality of the seamen develops the cruelty of the master, and how the cruelty of the master increases the brutality of the seamen, we all know too well.

The first step toward a reform which is so desirable is to assure the sailor of protection; to guarantee him his just rights; to show him that the law takes a beneficent interest in him. And then, his rights secured, we can begin to hold him to his obligations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. WRIGHT, it was Ordered, That Robert D. Brown, of Iowa, have leave to withdraw his petition and papers, asking an increase of pension, upon leaving copies.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. I ask for the following order:

Ordered, That the memorial of the Cherokee delegation, praying the payment of the claim of Lewis Downing and others, for services in the war of the rebellion, be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has there been an adverse report in that case?

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. I understand there has been a report made favorable to the claim.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order will be made.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BOREMAN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 156) for the relief of Joseph Nock, reported adversely thereon, and moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition and accompanying papers of Matthew Wright, asking relief for the destruction of property by Sioux Indians in 1862, and by soldiers in 1865 and 1866, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. MERRIMON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 131) for the relief of John P. Kelsey, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. BOUTWELL, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 109) to reorganize the clerical force of the General Land Office, reported it with an amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. WRIGHT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 392) granting pensions to the surviving officers of the war of 1812; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. EDMUNDS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 393) to provide assistance to circuit judges in certain cases; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CAMERON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 394) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the diplomatic and consular systems of the United States," passed August 18, 1856, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

CAPITOL AND DEPARTMENTAL TELEGRAPH.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 89) in relation to the lines of telegraph connecting the Capitol with the various Departments of the Government.

The amendments of the House of Representatives were, in line 1, after the word "telegraph," to insert "connecting the Capitol with the various Departments in Washington;" and at the end of the bill to add the following:

And the Secretary or head of each Executive Department and the Congressional Printer are hereby authorized to detail one person from their present force of employés to operate the instruments in said Departments and Printing Office; and each House of Congress may provide for the employment of an operator in their respective wings of the Capitol, at a compensation not exceeding one hundred dollars per month during the sessions of Congress.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I think no objection will be made to the amendments. While I am not much in love with the whole proposition of establishing this telegraph system between the White House and the different Departments and the Capitol, as it involves a considerable expense to begin with, and will hereafter annually in the additional number of employés, at the same time it seems to have been resolved upon; and it also appears that such an amendment as this is indispensable almost to the working of the telegraph which we have already established. I move, therefore, that we concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. SHERMAN. In order to make the morning hour as useful as possible I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Calendar, acting only upon bills to which there is no objection, under what was known as the Anthony rule of the last session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the motion of the Senator from Ohio? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will report the first bill on the Calendar.

Mr. SHERMAN. The bill pending yesterday on the Calendar I suppose would go over, being the subject of objection. So it might as well be passed over.

GENERAL AMNESTY.

The CHIEF CLERK. The next bill on the Calendar is the bill (H. R. No. 472) granting general amnesty and prescribing an oath of office.

Mr. ANTHONY. That had better go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will lie over. The next bill will be read.

GOLD AND SILVER.

The CHIEF CLERK. The next business on the Calendar is the joint resolution (S. R. No. 4) proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing that the United States shall never make anything but gold and silver a legal tender in the payment of debts.

Mr. BOREMAN. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be passed over.

HEIRS OF GENERAL CARLETON.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 59) granting relief to Eva, Etta, Henry, and Guy Carleton, heirs of General James H. Carleton, deceased; which was considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Eva, Etta, Henry, and Guy Carleton, heirs of General James H. Carleton, or their legal representatives, in full satisfaction for property destroyed by order of General Canby, dated Fort Craig, New Mexico, February 21, 1862, the sum of $7,600, being the amount found due by a board organized under special order numbered 159, issued by General E. R. S. Canby, and dated Santa Fé, New Mexico, September 3, 1862.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no report accompanying this bill; but there was a report made at the Forty-second Congress with the papers.

Mr. WRIGHT. The report was made at the last session, and this bill then passed both Houses, as I now remember, but failed to receive the signature of the President. There is no new report, but the old report stands as the finding of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont desire that the old report be read?

Mr. SHERMAN. Has it been acted upon by the committee at this session and reported favorably?

Mr. WRIGHT. Yes, sir; at this session.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to hear the report read. If this falls within one line of cases it ought to be passed; if within another, not.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. DAVIS from the Committee on Claims, on the 15th of February, 1873:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Eva, Etta, Henry, and Guy Carleton, heirs of General James H. Carleton, deceased, late of the United States Army, having considered the same, beg leave to submit the following report:

It appears that General James H. Carleton, in the year 1854, purchased, for the use and benefit of his minor children, certain property in and near to the town of Albuquerque, in the Territory of New Mexico.

This property consisted of some twelve buildings, corrals, and other improvements; and in the year 1862 was rented to, and was occupied by, the United States troops for various purposes, as shops, stables, store-houses, hospitals, &c., and was so continued under rent to the Quartermaster's Department up to March 2, 1862. At this date it is shown that, owing to the exigencies of the war, (the late war of the rebellion,) it became necessary to destroy the said improvements by fire to prevent the valuable property stored therein falling into the hands of the enemy.

The authority for this destruction of petitioner's property was an order issued by General Canby, commanding Department of New Mexico, and is as follows:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT NEW MEXICO,
Fort Craig, New Mexico, February 21, 1862.

SIR: After a severe battle to-day the enemy has succeeded in effecting a lodgment on the river above this place, and will probably succeed in cutting off our communications with the upper country. You will hold yourself prepared to remove or destroy all public property, and particularly provisions, so that nothing that is useful may fall into the hands of the enemy.

All trains and detachments now on the way should be turned back.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ED. R. S. CANBY,
Colonel Nineteenth Infantry, Commanding Department.

Commanding Officers ALBUQUERQUE, SANTA FÉ, FORT LYON.

That this order was carried into effect, so far as concerns the destruction of claimant's property, is set forth in the following certificate of Captain Enos:

SANTA FÉ, NEW MEXICO, September 27, 1862.

I certify that the houses and buildings belonging to Eva, Etta, Henry, and Guy Carleton, situated in the town of Albuquerque, New Mexico, were, by my order, destroyed by fire on the 2d day of March, 1862, to prevent the public property stored therein from falling into the hands of the rebel enemy.

H. M. ENOS,
Captain and Assistant Quartermaster, United States Army.

To ascertain the amount of damage sustained by claimants in the destruction of their property in the manner set forth by Captain Enos's certificate, a board of survey convened at Albuquerque, New Mexico, on the 10th of September, 1862, in pursuance of the following order, viz:

[Special Orders No. 159.]

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF NEW MEXICO,
Santa Fé, New Mexico, September 3, 1862.

A board of survey is hereby appointed to meet at Albuquerque, New Mexico, on Wednesday, the 10th of September, 1862, or as soon thereafter as practicable, to assess the damage upon the buildings which were rented and occupied up to the 2d of March, 1862, when a portion of those buildings was destroyed.

Detail for the board: Colonel C. Carson, First New Mexican Volunteers; Captain H. R. Selden, Fifth United States Infantry; First Lieutenant A. L. Anderson, Fifth United States Infantry.

By order of Brigadier-General E. R. S. Canby.

GURDEN CHAPIN,
Captain Seventh Infantry, Acting Assistant Adjutant-General.

The following is an extract from the proceedings of said board:

ALBUQUERQUE, NEW MEXICO, September 12, 1862.

The board met pursuant to adjournment; present, all the members.

The board then proceeded to examine into the condition of, and assess the damages upon, twelve houses and seven corrals, the property of Eva, Etta, Henry, and Guy Carleton, which houses and corrals were rented by the Quartermaster's Department, United States Army, as "shops, stables, corrals, clothing, and quartermaster's store-houses," and as a "hospital," and were occupied until the 2d of March, 1862.

The board, after careful examination and accurate measurement, finds the nature and money value of the damages to the said property as follows, viz:

Three of the said houses were entirely destroyed by fire, by order of Captain H. M. Enos, assistant quartermaster, United States Army, on the 2d of March, 1862. The estimate of their value, together with that of the other damages sustained by said property, is included in the following:

For fifty-nine doors and gates destroyed	$837 00
For fifty-seven windows destroyed	923 00
For 25,047 feet of lumber, at $50 per 1,000 feet	1,252 35
For 714 roof-timbers, at $3 each	2,142 00
For 51,528 adobes, at $12 per 1,000	618 00
For laying up walls	810 33
For carpenter-work, laying floors, &c	250 32
For nails and locks, and grating to windows	350 00
For plastering and finishing walls	192 00
For removing ruins	125 00
For contingent expenses	100 00
Total damages to twelve houses and seven corrals	7,600 00

The board is further of opinion that the aforesaid damages were consequent upon the abandonment of the aforesaid buildings by the United States troops on the 2d of March, 1862, and their subsequent occupation by the enemy and by lawless citizens.

C. CARSON,
Colonel First New Mexico Volunteers.
H. R. SELDEN,
Captain Fifth Infantry.
A. L. ANDERSON,
First Lieutenant and Adjutant Fifth Infantry.

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT NEW MEXICO,
September 18, 1862.

The proceedings of the board approved.

ED. R. S. CANBY.

The award of this military board, convened by General Canby's order, to ascertain the damage to claimant's property, seems to have been rendered after careful consideration, giving in detail the various items of loss and their estimated value.

It appears that General Carleton, in behalf of claimants, applied to the Thirty-seventh Congress for relief, and his memorial was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs in the Senate. Mr. NESMITH, then a member of that committee, on the 21st of February, 1863, submitted a favorable report, concluding in these words, that "the committee, fully satisfied that the Government, by its proper officers, destroyed this rented property for prudential reasons, report a bill for relief," &c., the amount of relief provided in said bill being $7,600. This bill, for want of time it seems, failed to pass.

It further appears that on January 26, 1867, and while General Carleton was yet living, a claim was filed in the office of the Quartermaster-General for compensation for the destruction of this same property, through one John L. Watts, esq. On January 29, 1867, the Quartermaster-General returned the letter of Mr. Watts on the subject to the War Department, with report, "That this is a case in which the Quartermaster's Department cannot afford relief, as it is a claim for the destruction of property as a military necessity. It is respectfully suggested that the applicant be referred to Congress."

The report was returned February 7, 1867 "approved" and Mr. Watts was advised of the action.

It also further appears that on June 3, 1871, Frank G. Newlands, esq., of San Francisco, California, refiled the case in behalf of claimants, and on July 20, 1871, the case was returned to Mr. Newlands, as requested, with the information embraced in the report of the Quartermaster-General of January 29, 1867, already quoted.

As relief has been denied claimants, on application to the Quartermaster's Department, on the ground that the claim was for property destroyed as a military necessity, a member of this committee again brought the case to the attention of the Quartermaster-General, with a request for the opinion of that officer as to the justice of the claim. The case submitted was returned, after being reviewed, with the Quartermaster-General's indorsement, "That Congress alone, in my opinion, has power to grant relief. It appears to be a case in which relief should be given."

From all the evidence in the case it seems clear to the committee that the claimants are entitled to relief; that the damage sustained by the destruction of their property was occasioned by the military authorities of the United States; that the sum of $7,600 would be but a fair and just compensation to the claimants for the loss of their property, and while they would recommend that this amount should be paid to the claimants, they do not deem it expedient to recommend that interest should be paid upon that sum, to be computed from the date of the award of the military board, as provided in the accompanying bill.

They therefore report back the bill with an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not think there is any ground to object to that.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WRIGHT. I desire to make a suggestion in regard to that bill. There are some technical amendments suggested in the names of the parties, but nothing else. I suppose that can be done by common consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are the amendments reported by the committee?

Mr. WRIGHT. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Those amendments changing the names of the parties will be considered as agreed to.

ENLISTMENTS IN THE NAVY.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 480) to provide for enlistments in the Navy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WEST. Yes, sir; I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the Senator from New Hampshire allow that bill to be indefinitely postponed?

Mr. CRAGIN. No, sir.

BANKRUPT LAW.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 792) to repeal the act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved March 2, 1867, and all laws and parts of laws amendatory thereto.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not ready to go on with that bill this morning. I gave notice yesterday that I would ask the Senate to proceed with it to-morrow, or as soon thereafter as it can be reached.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be laid over for the present.

MARCUS OTTERBOURG.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 169) for the relief of Marcus Otterbourg, late consul of the United States at the city of Mexico and minister to the republic of Mexico.

The bill was read.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. What committee does that come from?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let the report be read.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is a very bad precedent, and it ought not to be passed without some consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a report made by the Committee on Foreign Relations at a former session of Congress, not at this session.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Let it be read.

Mr. SHERMAN. As the Senator having charge of the bill is not present, perhaps it had better go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be laid aside, and the next bill on the Calendar will be read.

ROBERT BENT AND JACK SMITH.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 204) for the relief of Robert Bent and Jack Smith; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill confirms the gift of six hundred and forty acres of land, each, made to Robert Bent and Jack Smith, son of John S. Smith, by the postscript to the treaty concluded with the Arapahoe and Cheyenne Indians, February 18, 1861; and directs the Secretary of the Interior to cause patents in fee-simple to be issued for the same to those persons, their heirs, assigns, or legal representatives, conveying to them all of the right, title, interest, and estate of the United States therein.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. What committee does that bill come from?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. From the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Is there a report accompanying it?

Mr. BOGY. I did not hear the objection made by the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine inquired if there was a report accompanying the bill.

Mr. BOGY. No written report; but I was instructed to report the bill itself by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I raise no objection to the consideration of the bill at the present time. Perhaps the Senator had better make a statement in regard to it.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think there ought to be some report on the matter. In passing bills without objection it is the general custom to have a report.

Mr. BOGY. I made no written report, but recommended the passage of the bill. I made a statement at the time I made the report of the views of the committee, showing that the bill was in itself proper and should be passed.

I will state for the information of the Senate that these persons were entitled to these tracts of land under treaty stipulations made in 1861, it being believed at the time that as the treaty had been ratified by the Senate it was competent for the Secretary of the Interior to authorize a survey to be made of the lands, and patents to issue accordingly. On application made to the Department by the parties interested, the Secretary of the Interior decided that although they were entitled to the land beyond a doubt, yet it was not competent for him to issue a patent; but in the mean time he authorized a survey of the lands to be made. The surveys have been made and have been approved; and a report comes here from the Secretary of the Interior stating all these facts, and requesting that this bill be passed as a matter of form, to authorize him to issue the patents in form to the parties who are no doubt entitled to this land. There can be no question about it; it is a matter of legal technicality.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is it simply giving them land according to the treaty?

Mr. BOGY. Simply giving land according to the treaty and the survey made by order of the Department.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARCUS OTTERBOURG.

Mr. SCHURZ. I understand that a bill was passed over, which I reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations, on account of my not being here. I ask that it be taken up now. It is Senate bill No. 169.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be again read.

The bill (S. No. 169) for the relief of Marcus Otterbourg, late consul of the United States at the city of Mexico and minister to the republic of Mexico, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It is a direction to the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Marcus Otterbourg, late consul of the United States at the city of Mexico and minister plenipotentiary to the republic of Mexico, in full compensation for his services as consul and minister, the salary of consul to the city of Mexico, exercising diplomatic functions from April 8, 1866, until June 20, 1867, both inclusive; and of minister to Mexico from June 21 until September 30, 1867, both inclusive; deducting therefrom the salary of consul at the city of Mexico from April 8, 1866, to September 30, 1867, and deducting the sum of $85.80, awarded him by the Court of Claims for exercising diplomatic functions from August 19 until September 9, 1867.

Mr. SCHURZ. The only thing I desire to say is that this is the third time this bill has been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations, and it has passed the Senate twice in this identical form, and failed, for want of time, in going through the House of Representatives.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Does the Senator think it a good precedent to establish to allow consuls the pay of ministers if they chance to perform that duty?

Mr. SCHURZ. This was an extraordinary case. This gentleman was appointed minister to Mexico, and afterward not confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I think it ought to be an entirely exceptional case in order to justify the allowance.

Mr. SCHURZ. It is an exceptional case.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Does the report show that?

Mr. SCHURZ. The report shows that. It has been reported upon three times.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? The Chair hears no objection, and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. It seems to me the Senator from Missouri ought to put in an amendment to show the exceptional character of the case, because this is a violation of a general law which expressly prohibits a person appointed to one office from drawing the pay of another on any ground whatever.

Mr. SCHURZ. I have already stated that it is an exceptional case in this——

Mr. SHERMAN. Ought not that to appear on the face of the bill, so that this bill will not be quoted as a precedent? In the Army, for instance, a thousand cases occur where a lieutenant may perform the duties of a major, or even a colonel, and yet the law would not allow him any higher pay than that of his own grade.

Mr. SCHURZ. I think it is stated in this bill. It reads, "late consul of the United States at the city of Mexico and minister plenipotentiary to the republic of Mexico," thereby indicating that he was appointed as such and had been acting minister plenipotentiary to the republic of Mexico.

Mr. WEST. Is that the fact?

Mr. SCHURZ. Certainly it is.

Mr. WEST. That he was appointed minister?

Mr. SCHURZ. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHERMAN. If he was legally appointed he would draw his pay. He was not confirmed, though, as I understand.

Mr. SCHURZ. Here is the report made originally by the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. SUMNER.] I suggest that the Secretary read that, and that will give the whole history of the case.

The Chief Clerk read the following report submitted by Mr. SUMNER, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, on the 18th of June, 1870:

The Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the petition of Marcus Otterbourg, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to report as follows:

Mr. Marcus Otterbourg was appointed consul of the United States at the city of Mexico in August, 1861. In July, 1865, he tendered his resignation, assigning as a reason that his salary, by law fixed at $1,000 per annum, was inadequate to permit him to represent the country creditably. His resignation was accepted by Mr. Hunter, Acting Secretary of State, with the request that he would continue to hold the office until the arrival of a successor at his post of duty.

Of subsequent facts of importance in this case, Mr. Seward, then Secretary of State, made the following official statement, dated February 23, 1869:

"Mr. Otterbourg returned to the United States. In March, 1866, he went back to Mexico, as consul, and to take charge of the archives of the legation, Mr. William H. Corwin, acting chargé d'affaires, having been recalled. He reported himself as having arrived at Mexico on the 8th day of April, 1866, and as being occupied in verifying the inventory of archives and other property of the legation, which was finally completed, and he put in charge thereof by Mr. Corwin, in pursuance of the instructions of the State Department, on the 20th day of the same month. He was thenceforward recognized as a consular officer, performing, and authorized to perform, diplomatic functions, so far as such were necessary and practicable in the exceptional condition of Mexico, and of the relations of this Government to the usurping government of Prince Maximilian, in actual possession of the capital, and to the rightful government of President Juarez, which was generally remote therefrom, and migratory with the vicissitudes of war.

"Mr. Otterbourg kept the Department informed of the political situation in Mexico. His dispatches, not concerning his commercial functions as consul, but those of a political agent, were classified and preserved among the diplomatic archives. In October, 1866, Mr. Otterbourg again returned to Washington, with the approval of the Department, and was directed to make a confidential report on the situation in Mexico at that time. He was furnished with a copy of the instructions to Lewis D. Campbell, who had been appointed minister to Mexico, with whom, on his return, he was directed to communicate.

"He proceeded to Mexico and made a report, which he delivered to our minister on his arrival at Vera Cruz. During the whole period, from April, 1866, to June 21, 1867, that Mr. Otterbourg was consul, and in charge of the legation as aforesaid, there was not in that country any other officer of the United States authorized to perform diplomatic functions therein, except, or otherwise, than that Lewis D. Campbell, a duly commissioned minister, was for a day or two upon its coast, or in the harbor of Vera Cruz, whence he returned without proceeding to the interior, or putting himself in communication with the government of Mexico, except when, in April, 1867, he addressed, from New Orleans, a letter to the Mexican secretary for foreign affairs, requesting humane treatment for Maximilian in case of his capture.

"In response to interrogatories for the United States: The United States had at no time a representative accredited to the government of Prince Maximilian. We had no other minister appointed to the government of Mexico during the time for which Mr. Otterbourg claims compensation, and who accepted, or made any attempt to proceed upon his mission, except Lewis D. Campbell, of whom I have before spoken, and no one who, during that period, presented his letters of credence. The office for which Mr. Otterbourg claims salary was not occupied by any other person. During the whole period of the occupation of Mexico by Prince Maximilian, Congress made the usual annual appropriation for a minister to Mexico, with no other variation than that, in the act making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service for the year ending June 30, 1866, the words 'republic of Mexico' were substituted for 'Mexico,' the same language being repeated in subsequent acts. This Government never recognized the government of Maximilian, in the sense of acknowledging or treating with it. We knew it only as an awkward political fact, or rather political pretension, supported by force and foreign intervention."

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not ask for the further reading of that report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The further reading will be dispensed with.

Mr. SHERMAN. It seems that this is an exceptional case, but I want the bill to show that it is not an ordinary case.

Mr. SCHURZ. It has been suggested to me to have the bill amended in line 6 by inserting the words "having been appointed" between the words "and" and "minister," so that it will read "late consul of the United States, and having been appointed minister plenipotentiary to the republic of Mexico;" which would avoid the possibility of its being taken as a precedent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CONKLING. I think that amendment is more commendable because it will avoid a bad precedent than because it is true. I listened to the statement read from the desk, and I did not hear that this man was appointed minister to Mexico. I should like now to hear the part of the statement which establishes that fact.

The Chief Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the report, as follows:

On June 21, 1867, Mr. Otterbourg was nominated by the President minister plenipotentiary and envoy extraordinary of the United States to the republic of Mexico. The Senate adjourned on July 21, 1867, without having confirmed the nomination of Mr. Otterbourg; but he continued to discharge the duties of minister plenipotentiary until August 28, 1867, when he received the notification of the lapse of his commission in consequence of the adjournment of the Senate as above. Mr. Otterbourg thereupon returned to the United States and reported at the State Department November 1, 1867, leaving the consulate in the charge of a competent person.

Having presented his account for his services, it was certified by the Fifth Auditor, as for consul in charge of legation, from April 8, 1866, to June 20, 1867, at the rate of $2,800 per annum; and for minister, from June 21 to September 30, 1867, at the rate of $12,000 per annum. The First Comptroller, however, deducted all allowance to him as consul in charge of legation, and as minister, but admitted and certified the salary of consul.

The case was taken to the Court of Claims, where judgment was rendered for $85.80 for exercising diplomatic functions from the 19th of August to the 9th of September, 1867, in addition to a further sum due for his services as consul. The court refused to allow salary as minister on the technical objection that Mr. Otterbourg took his oath of office before the consul-general of Switzerland, whose authority for that purpose does not appear. There was, however, no one else before whom he could have taken the oath unless he had returned to Washington for that purpose; and furthermore the Department of State regarded him as minister and promised him compensation as such.

In accordance with the above statements the committee report a bill giving compensation to Mr. Otterbourg as consul performing diplomatic functions from April 8, 1866, until June 20, 1867, both inclusive; and as minister from June 21 to September 30, 1867, deducting what he has received as consul, and the sum of $85.80 awarded him by the Court of Claims for exercising diplomatic functions from the 19th August to the 9th September, 1867.

Mr. CONKLING. I suggest that if the bill is to be put upon the ground that it is exceptional because this gentleman was nominated as minister, in place of speaking of his having been appointed it ought to recite the fact as it is; and then I cannot convince myself after hearing this statement that it shows any claim for services beyond those of a consul discharging diplomatic duties. This gentleman went as consul to Mexico. Mr. Corwin was acting as chargé, or person in charge. The archives of the legation were turned over to the claimant here. He continued, as far as the business of any government or court near which he could be would enable him to continue, to discharge nominally consular functions, and to keep the foreign office of his own Government apprised of the doings of this peripatetic, or, I believe it is called, migratory, government in Mexico. Now, I can see that, except for technical reasons, it is substantially the case of a consul exercising diplomatic functions, and for that he ought to be paid; but that he should be paid for the time which I understand is covered by this bill as minister, as if he had been minister and had gone there as minister, at the rate of $12,000 a year—which, as Senators will remember, is the salary substituted for outfit and infit as it used to be, which covers the going and coming of a minister as well as his presence in a foreign country—that the case establishes any such thing as that I do not believe.

Mr. SCHURZ. The Senator from New York I think failed to state one feature of the case, and it is this: Mr. Otterbourg, at the time his nomination was sent to the Senate, was in Mexico; that he received notice of that nomination by telegraph or by the shortest mail-route; that he was ordered to present his credentials to the government at Mexico as minister, which he did, and was treated by Mr. Seward as minister; that afterward his accounts were objected to because he had not been sworn in by legitimate authority, there being no United States officer on the spot, and he taking the oath before the consul of Switzerland. That is the case, as I understand it; so that really he officiated as minister of the United States for a certain period near the government of Mexico, and claims pay for that period.

Mr. CONKLING. I venture to ask the attention of the Senate for one moment to the very point stated by the Senator from Missouri. This gentleman was in Mexico. How? As consul. In any other way? No; there is no pretense of it. The Senate was in session, and in the presence of the Senate the President nominated him as minister, and the Senate a few days afterward adjourned and the nomination fell. Did the President then proceed under that permission of the Constitution which enables him to fill vacancies which may happen during the recess of the Senate? Not at all. In the first place, no such vacancy had happened during the recess of the Senate. In the next place, he had proposed to fill it by nominating this gentleman to the Senate. He could not appoint him without the advice and consent of the Senate. That advice and consent was withheld; and although the Senator says that Mr. Seward deemed him minister, I think it is taking a liberty with the name and the memory of Mr. Seward to suppose that, although the Constitution said he was not minister, and although the law said he was not minister, and although he could not by any possibility on the facts be minister, yet Mr. Seward deemed him so. There is nothing in this statement to show that he deemed him so.

Now, I ask the Senate to observe that this gentleman, having been appointed consul, was in Mexico. He was nominated for minister on the 21st of June, and early in the next month of July the Senate adjourned and the nomination fell, and there never was an instant of time when he was minister. Now it is proposed to pay him, not only as consul, for which he has been paid already, not only as consul discharging diplomatic services, but to pay him at the rate of $12,000 a year, as if in truth he had been in his own land, and appointed minister, and had made a voyage to Vera Cruz, and thence traveled to the city of Mexico and remained there a year and returned.

Mr. SCHURZ. If there was any irregularity in this case it was an irregularity committed by this Government. Mr. Otterbourg was authorized, as I understand the case, to present his credentials as minister to the government of Mexico. He did so. He acted as minister—not as consul discharging diplomatic functions, but as minister—for a certain period, and for that period he claims pay. Now, I think he is, in equity, entitled to that pay, although the case may have been in a sense irregular. If it had not been irregular in some respect there would be no claim before Congress. But it seems to me, and so thought the Committee on Foreign Relations, which has reported this case three times just in the same way, that he was entitled to this equitable remuneration.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. SCHURZ.]

Mr. SHERMAN. Before the yeas and nays are taken, I ask the Senator from Missouri what is the amount, or the time in other words, that this appropriation covers?

Mr. SCHURZ. It covers but a very short time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the amount ought to be stated in the bill in all cases.

Mr. SCHURZ. It is the pay of minister to Mexico from June 21 to September 30.

Mr. SHERMAN. Of the same year?

Mr. SCHURZ. Yes, sir.

Mr. SUMNER. What is the amount?

Mr. SCHURZ. It can easily be figured. It is from June 21 to September 30, at the rate of the usual compensation of a minister to Mexico.

Mr. SHERMAN. Twelve thousand dollars a year, less his salary as consul.

Mr. SCHURZ. And then his salary as consul is to be deducted, so that the whole amount will be very small.

Mr. THURMAN. I should be glad if the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, or the Senator from Massachusetts who was so long chairman of the committee, would tell us what has been the usage of the Government in cases of this kind—whether there is any uniform established rule.

Mr. SUMNER. In reply to the inquiry of the Senator I will say that I have no strong memory of the facts in this case. I did not hear the report as it was read. But there is one general rule for the Department, I think, which is, where a service is rendered to pay for it by what lawyers call a quantum meruit. They pay for the service. Again and again in this Chamber have allowances been made to persons who had no regular confirmation as ministers or as chargé d'affaires, but who, nevertheless, in the absence of the minister or chargé d'affaires, did so serve; and the Senate, reviewing the facts, has awarded a compensation on the principle of a quantum meruit. The question then is, what is the quantum meruit? The ordinary practice is to take the salary that is allowed by law. It is supposed that in that way we may arrive at the proper conclusion.

Now, as I understand, in this case—and I have some recollection of the facts, though not very precisely—Mr. Otterbourg was nominated as envoy to Mexico, but not confirmed by the Senate; that in point of fact, de facto, for a certain time he did exercise the functions of a minister; and the question then occurs, shall he be paid for that service? As I understand, this bill proposes to pay him for the few months which he served, deducting therefrom what he received on account of his consular service at the same time. It makes but a small sum, hardly worth objecting to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Allow me to ask the Senator if it is not accompanied by this embarrassment, that although he was recognized by the executive department of the Government as minister, and proposed to the Senate as such, the Senate declined to recognize him as minister?

Mr. SUMNER. It did.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Now, does not the principal part of this service arise after that fact—after the Senate had declined to confirm him?

Mr. CONKLING. Every bit of it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. And if so, then does not the rule which the Senator from Massachusetts seeks to apply as a quantum meruit, fail?

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. SCHURZ] can answer that question better than I can.

Mr. SCHURZ. The fact is that part of the claim is for the time after the Senate had adjourned without having confirmed him until he was notified of that fact; and during that time he administered the duties of minister to Mexico.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That is to say, he went to Mexico recognized by the executive department, and proposed by the executive department as minister in good faith; and in the mean time his name was sent to the Senate, but the Senate did not confirm him, and he still continued, notwithstanding that fact, to act as minister.

Mr. SCHURZ. Not being aware of that fact.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. And that was without notice to him. But as soon as he had notice of the fact he resigned. Is that the state of facts?

Mr. SCHURZ. That is the case.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Then my impression, on the whole, is that it does come within the principle stated by the Senator from Massachusetts, that this claimant is entitled on a quantum meruit.

Mr. SCHURZ. I would say in regard to the facts that the report here is the report originally made by the Senator from Massachusetts——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired, the Senate resumes the consideration of the resolution reported by the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SCHURZ. I would ask that this bill be informally continued.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Let the finance resolution be laid aside informally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business will be laid aside informally, if there be no objection, for the purpose of continuing the consideration of the Otterbourg bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SCHURZ. I was going to say that the statement of facts just read to the Senate by the Secretary was originally made by the Senator from Massachusetts; that afterward the bill was put in my charge, and I reported the same bill back. My impression was that I had written another report, but I discover now that I had not done so, but simply relied on the report of the Senator from Massachusetts as originally made.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I merely desire to call the attention of the Senate to at least five hundred cases that will come within this precedent if we should establish it. I remember that on one occasion we had somebody who acted as Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, and whenever the Secretary of the Treasury was absent, even at New York for a day or two, he came in with a claim as having discharged the duties de facto of Secretary of the Treasury, and another such case arose in the State Department; and all over the world we have the absences of ministers for a little while, temporary absences, when the secretary of the legation or the consul discharges the duties de facto of the minister. Now, if we establish the principle of paying a subordinate for discharging the duties of the superior officer in any given place, we shall open the door for an indefinite amount of claims upon the Treasury.

Mr. SCHURZ. I beg leave to remark that this is not an analogous case.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Does not the Senator from Vermont see the obvious distinction between this case and the case which he supposes? In the case he supposes, where the duties of a Secretary devolved on the Assistant Secretary, they are thus devolved on him by law ordinarily, and hence no such promise for compensation could arise. But here is a case where the man was actually performing the duty, not of consul, but he was performing the duty which the executive Government had devolved upon him as minister. That is the distinction, it seems to me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CONKLING. Let me understand that amendment. That is an amendment which is to assert that this man was appointed minister to Mexico.

Mr. SCHURZ. Then say "having been designated."

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It had better be modified in that way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported as modified.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "and," and before the word "minister," in line 6, it is proposed to insert "having been designated."

Mr. CONKLING. That is a military term; he was detailed, I suppose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the passage of the bill the Senator from New York demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. NORWOOD. I should like to have the bill reported; I am not informed of its contents.

The Chief Clerk again read the bill.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 25, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS — Messrs. Anthony, Bayard, Buckingham, Carpenter, Cooper, Cragin, Crozier, Davis, Edmunds, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Hamlin, Howe, Kelly, McCreery, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Norwood, Ramsey, Saulsbury, Schurz, Stockton, Sumner, Thurman, and Tipton—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Boreman, Boutwell, Chandler, Conkling, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Hamilton of Texas, Ingalls, Jones, Logan, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morrill of Vermont, Pratt, Robertson, Sargent, Scott, West, and Wright—19.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Ames, Bogy, Brownlow, Cameron, Clayton, Conover, Dennis, Dorsey, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton of Maryland, Hitchcock, Johnston, Lewis, Oglesby, Patterson, Ransom, Sherman, Spencer, Sprague, Stevenson, Stewart, Wadleigh, and Windom—28.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to reconsider the vote on the passage of this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion will be entered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not wish the motion entered; I wish it tried now. I desire to say that from what I had known of this case before I should have voted against the passage of the bill upon its merits as it stood; but being out at the moment, before my time to vote came again I was put in possession of some information in the hands of my friend from New York [Mr. CONKLING] which led me to vote in favor of the passage of the bill, as it was evidently favorably received by the Senate, in order that the Senate might reconsider the question upon this additional information.

Mr. BOREMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. BAYARD. I rise to a question of order. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware demands the regular order.

Mr. BOREMAN. Have I not the floor?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The special order is before the Senate, being called for, and the Senator from Delaware has the floor on that; being the resolution reported by the Committee on Finance in relation to specie payments and the currency.

Mr. BOREMAN. I thought I had the floor.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask the Senator from Delaware to allow me to occupy one moment before he proceeds. I do it that no injustice may be done to the claimant, whose bill a motion to reconsider has been entered; and therefore I state from my present information that, so far from this gentleman having been nominated for minister to Mexico and left before the Senate until it adjourned, and an interval having elapsed, he was nominated on the day stated in this report, not for minister, but for secretary of legation, and was rejected by the Senate on the very next day. The newspapers, at all events, and such other records as I have a right to speak of openly, attest that fact, and I think upon examination it will be found that it can be attested otherwise. Now, if there is any mistake about this, the Senator having the bill in charge, before it comes up again, can look at it and see that no injustice is done.

Mr. SCHURZ. I merely want to say that the state of the case as laid before the Committee on Foreign Relations, as I am informed, was quite different. Still we may look after the matter and see how the fact is.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 1564) establishing life-saving stations, and appropriating therefor; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President of the Senate pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 1231) to abolish the office of deputy commissioner of internal revenue; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1382) authorizing coinage to be executed by the mints of the United States for foreign countries.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 1564) establishing life-saving stations, and appropriating therefor, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

THE CURRENCY—SPECIE PAYMENTS.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the following resolution, reported by Mr. SHERMAN from the Committee on Finance:

Resolved, That it is the duty of Congress during its present session to adopt definite measures to redeem the pledge made in the act approved March 18, 1869, entitled "An act to strengthen the public credit," as follows: "And the United States also pledges its faith to make provision at the earliest practicable period for the redemption of the United States notes in coin;" and the Committee on Finance is directed to report to the Senate, at as early a day as practicable, such measures as will not only redeem this pledge of the public faith, but will also furnish a currency of uniform value, always redeemable in gold or its equivalent, and so adjusted as to meet the changing wants of trade and commerce.

The pending question being on the amendment submitted by Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, to strike out all after the word "resolved" and insert the following:

That the Committee on Finance is directed to report to the Senate, at as early a day as practicable, such measures as will restore commercial confidence and give stability and elasticity to the circulating medium through a moderate increase of currency.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, the people and the Government of the United States have reached a crisis in their financial condition and have arrived at a point where the roads fork, so that a decision is now necessary whether we shall take the path to the right or to the left; and it is the momentous nature of this decision and its consequences to the entire American people, not to the present generation only but to those who shall succeed us, which impels me to yield my contribution and to take my share of responsibility in the expression of my views at this time to the Senate on this all-important subject.

In September last, the bubble of railway and other speculations had attained its greatest size and most beautiful hues, when it suddenly burst before the eyes of its admirers; and so vast had been its proportions and wide-spread the sphere of its influence that few indeed were the interests throughout the country that did not feel the shock, the effects of which are everywhere apparent, and are not even yet entirely appreciated.

The losses caused by this collapse have been inflicted, but they are not yet distributed, and it is difficult to say where eventually they will fall. The parties foremost in blowing these bubbles had been intimately and influentially connected with the financial management of the Government, and are now conspicuous victims of those financial fallacies which they so zealously sought to impose and enforce upon the community in which for so many years they successfully defied all logic and the experience of history; which has, however, at last vindicated itself, so that even Mr. Jay Cooke and his most devoted disciples will no longer declare "a national debt to be a national blessing." Naturally the effect of such failures and bankruptcy was seen and felt in its effects upon the currency of the country, and the system of handling and distributing that currency known as the national banks.

The attention of the whole country, and especially of its Representatives in Congress, has been drawn to the consideration of the error and palpable defects existing in our present system and condition of currency and banking, and remedies by way of legislation are urgently demanded, admitted on all sides to be necessary, and yet the old saying, "Quot homines, tot sententiæ," was never better illustrated; for each man of the many hundred who write or speak upon the subject presents a separate scheme for relief.

Certain it is that no question of deeper gravity, more essential and indispensable for the happiness and security of a civilized people can be imagined than the creation and regulation of a circulating medium of exchange—the money which is to be the common denominator for everything that men consume, and all that is bought and sold by every individual in society, or that enters into human use.

Is it not possible, and if possible is it not clearly our duty, not to the present only but to the future, not alone to ourselves of this generation but to our posterity in coming generations, to settle or to take, so far as sound prudence and discretion may dictate in the line of practical statesmanship, some step to settle this vast question of currency upon the basis of those sound principles which, having stood the test of time, were accepted by the founders of our Government, and by them fondly hoped to be continued as the corner-stone of our financial structure? Until 1861 I am not aware that any American statesman of eminence, any court of record in the United States, or any citizen conversant with the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, had been found to declare that anything but gold and silver coin, made current by law of the United States, was money and legal tender for all debts.

And now, in making a brief but necessary reference to the history of legislation by Congress and the adjudication by the Supreme Court on this subject, I expressly aver the intention in making such reference to glean therefrom seeds of instruction only, and not in any way to reopen issues of opinion or disturb the ashes of past controversies. If I cite judicial opinions or acts of legislation, it is merely to gain from them light as to our present position, and wisdom as to our future guidance.

In speaking of this first attempt to issue notes of the Federal Government and make them by law a legal tender for the payment of all debts, the gentleman who first introduced the measure (Mr. Spaulding, of New York,) into Congress, advocated its passage, and became subsequently the historian of this most important episode in our career as a nation, has said, in December, 1868:

> Introducing the legal-tender bill early in January, 1862, immediately after the suspension of specie payments in this great crisis, I advocated the bill as a war measure, a measure of temporary relief to the Treasury, and on the ground that it was an imperative necessity to preserve the life of the nation. I conceded that it was a forced loan, and could only be justified on grounds of necessity. As a war measure, passed during war, continuing during the war, and as long as the exigency lasted, I believe it was necessary and proper to successfully carry on the war, and was therefore constitutional. I am equally clear that as a peace measure it is unconstitutional. No one would now think of passing a legal-tender act making the promises of the Government (a mere form of credit) a legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private. Such a law, passed while the Government is on a peace footing, could not be sustained for one moment.

Shortly after these words were written a number of cases came into the Supreme Court of the United States; and at the December term, 1869, decision was reached in the case of Hepburn vs. Griswold, with the conclusion that power was not vested in the Congress to make promises to pay dollars a legal tender in payment of debts previously contracted. The opinion of the court, delivered by the late Chief Justice Chase, who had been the Secretary of the Treasury at the time of the passage of the act authorizing the issue of irredeemable notes and making them a legal tender, and who had acquiesced therein, concludes as follows. I read from 8 Wallace, 625:

> It is not surprising that amid the tumult of the late civil war, and under the influence of apprehensions for the safety of the Republic almost universal, different views, never before entertained by American statesmen or jurists, were adopted by many. The time was not favorable to considerate reflection upon the constitutional limits of legislative or executive authority. If power was assumed from patriotic motives, the assumption found ready justification in patriotic hearts. Many who doubted yielded their doubts; many who did not doubt were silent. Some who were strongly averse to making Government notes a legal tender felt themselves constrained to acquiesce in the views of the advocates of the measure. Not a few who then insisted upon its necessity, or acquiesced in that view, have, since the return of peace, and under the influence of the calmer time, reconsidered their conclusions, and now concur in those which we have just announced. These conclusions seem to us to be fully sanctioned by the letter and spirit of the Constitution.

In this opinion of the court five judges concurred and three dissented. The question had been argued at different times in five other cases by counsel of eminence, and it was held long under advisement. It was stated by one of the learned justices (Field) that—

> No case has ever been decided by this court since its organization in which the questions presented were more fully argued or were more maturely considered.

The case of Hepburn vs. Griswold was decided in conference November 27, 1869, and judgment announced on February 7, 1870.

One of the judges (Grier) retired from the bench on February 1, 1870. In the course of the next six weeks two other judges, one in the place of Judge Grier and one additional judge, were appointed, and an order for a rehearing of the question was almost immediately made, and in April, 1871, the cases known as the "legal-tender cases," reported in 12 Wallace, were argued, and in the month following judgment was entered affirming the power to exist in Congress under the Constitution to make the Government's promises to pay expressed upon paper legal tender for the payment of all debts, public as well as private, and this decision was reached by the preponderance of five judges over four.

Mr. President, I trust I shall always speak of the judgments of the Supreme Court of the United States with the becoming respect due to that elevated tribunal and the personal characters of the jurists who compose it; but I cannot but feel that the last decision of the court would tend more to change ours from a Government of limited and delegated powers into an absolutism than any one fact in our history. Said Chief Justice Marshall, "The degree in which a measure is necessary can never be a test of the legal right to adopt it." I fear also that the finality of judicial decisions when once deliberately made, which constitutes so requisite an element in that stability which is essential to good government, has been greatly impaired, if not in effect destroyed, by the admission of the doctrine that the principles upon which cases are decided in the Supreme Court of the United States are to change with the change of the persons who may compose the tribunal.

The reversal of this most deliberate decision at the same term of court during which it had been announced, was truly stated by Chief Justice Chase, (12 Wallace, page 572,) to be—

> Unprecedented in the history of the court; and has been produced by no change in the opinions of those who concurred in the former judgment. One closed an honorable career by resignation after the case had been decided, after the opinion had been read and agreed to in conference, and after the day when it would have been delivered in court, had not the delivery been postponed for a week to give time for the preparation of the dissenting opinion. * * * The then majority find themselves now in a minority in this court, as now constituted upon the question.

But, sir, the decision of the court has been made as I have stated, and the power of Congress announced under the Constitution to make anything, however worthless, intrinsically legal tender in discharge of any debt.

It might startle some farmer to know that he could be compelled to receive fifty acres of land instead of the hundred acres he contracted for; or the merchant that his invoice should turn out to be one-half the value of the bill of exchange he had accepted and paid for it, or that a contract for one hundred bales of cotton or a thousand bushels of wheat should be fulfilled by the delivery of fifty bales of one and five hundred bushels of the other. Yet the force and effect of the late decision goes much further, and provides that any debt, no matter how valuable intrinsically was the consideration therefor, may by the will of Congress be discharged by a paper note not worth intrinsically one cent of coined money. If such a power be not an unlimited power; if a government which has such control, such complete power of destruction, over every contract of every citizen be not an absolute government, my imagination fails to comprehend the force and meaning of the English language.

Sir, we must make our contracts and conduct our dealings in accordance with laws as expounded by the judicial branch of the Government, but if the necessary results of the decision I have referred to ever penetrate and possess the minds of the American people, I shall look to see a reversal of such a decision, even if an amendment to the Constitution is required to effect it.

But it may well be said Congress has issued irredeemable paper money, made it a legal tender for all debts—and the Supreme Court have sustained the exercise of the latter power—and here we are face to face with the facts and some of the results. What is to be done? My answer is, to rectify the errors of the past as fast as sound discretion and regard for existing rights will admit.

Let us again establish a stable standard of values by basing all currency upon our gold and silver coin of ascertained and declared value, into which it shall be convertible, using such coin as currency also whenever it shall be considered convenient or desirable. The principles of sound finance in all countries establish this as an essential basis of a circulating medium of paper.

If the people of the United States would pause and consider, on the one hand, the infinite importance, in a financial, economic, and moral point of view, of the permanent establishment of a sound basis of value for the currency; and, on the other hand, the innumerable evils and almost irreparable results that flow from banishing a standard of stable value from their currency, I feel convinced they would not hesitate to make prompt and serious present sacrifices to deliver themselves from the insidious and extensive evils of the latter system which has prevailed to their loss for nearly twelve years in this country.

Sir, the voice of Daniel Webster was heard with respect in his lifetime. I believe the wisdom of that great man has been so justified by events since his death that from the grave he may still speak with undiminished influence to his countrymen, and I would that his utterances could reach the ear of every citizen of this country. In speaking of the necessity for a currency of stable value, he said:

> First, as to the currency of the country. This is at all times a most important political object. A sound currency is an essential and indispensable security for the fruits of industry and honest enterprise. Every man of property or industry, every man who desires to preserve what he honestly possesses, or to obtain what he can honestly earn, has a direct interest in maintaining a safe circulating medium, such a medium as shall be a real and substantial representative of property—not liable to vibrate with opinions, not subject to be blown up or blown down by the breath of speculation, but made stable and secure by its immediate relation to that which the whole world regards as of a permanent value. A disordered currency is one of the greatest of political evils. It undermines the virtues necessary for the support of the social system, and encourages propensities destructive of its happiness. It wars against industry, frugality, and economy; and it fosters the evil spirits of extravagance and speculation. Of all the contrivances for cheating the laboring classes of mankind none has been more effectual than that which deludes them with paper money. This is the most effectual of inventions to fertilize the rich man's field by the sweat of the poor man's brow. Ordinary tyranny, oppression, excessive taxation, these bear lightly on the happiness of the mass of the community compared with a fraudulent currency and the robberies committed by a depreciated paper. Our own history has recorded for our instruction enough, and more than enough, of the demoralizing tendency, the injustice, and the intolerable oppression on the virtuous and well-disposed of a degraded paper currency authorized by law or in any way countenanced by government.

Let me also cite the language of the late Chief Justice Chase on this important subject, while he had such just cause to consider deeply and such opportunity to understand correctly. In delivering his dissenting opinion in the legal-tender cases, (12 Wallace, page 583,) he said:

> In considering this question we assume as a fundamental proposition that it is the duty of every government to establish a standard of value. The necessity of a standard is indeed universally acknowledged. Without it the transactions of society would become impossible. All measures, whether of extent, or weight, or value, must have certain proportions of that which they are intended to measure. The unit of extent must have certain definite length, the unit of weight certain definite gravity, and the unit of value certain definite value. These units, multiplied or subdivided, supply the standards by which all measures are properly made. The selection, therefore, by the common consent of all nations, of gold and silver as the standard of value was natural, or, more correctly speaking, inevitable. For whatever definitions of value political economists may have given, they all agree that gold and silver have more value in proportion to weight and size, and are less subject to loss by wear or abrasion, than any other material capable of easy subdivision and impression, and that their value changes less and by slower degrees, through considerable periods of time, than that of any other substance which could be used for the same purpose. And these are qualities indispensable to the convenient use of the standard required. In the construction of the constitutional grant of power to establish a standard of value, every presumption is, therefore, against that which would authorize the adoption of any other materials than those sanctioned by universal consent.

To this high American authority—and there is none higher in this country—let me add one more from an intelligent Scotsman, Mr. John Macdonnell, who, in his recent Survey of Political Economy, page 151, says:

Gold, silver, and copper possess certain properties which mark them out to be the cosmopolitan currency; it is not caprice frozen into convention, or the stamp of the mint, that has gained for them their present place; and Turgot says well, "Gold and silver are constituted, by the nature of things, money, and universal money, independently of all convention and law." They contain much value in small bulk, they are similar in quality wherever they are produced; they are indestructible; they are readily divisible, and yet do not suffer in beauty by division; and they are readily united. They are so scattered over the globe that the same expenditure of labor has, in the past at all events, generally produced about the same amount of metal; and being at once the most generally diffused and the rarest of metals, they are marked out by nature for coinage.

The value of such a standard of value as the basis of a people's currency is, then, first, its stability and its certainty; and, next, its universal exchangeability. With such money in his pocket a man may pay any debt and purchase any commodity at any point in the world. He possesses the common denominator in all articles of the world's commerce.

It is true that only in America and in some governments of Europe is gold the sole standard of value, while gold and silver are a joint standard in others, and silver only for four-fifths of mankind, India having a circulation in silver coin estimated at $1,000,000,000; but even there gold holds its intrinsic value, though not used for currency.

On the other hand, who can fully estimate the demoralizing influences which the use of a fluctuating and false standard of value in their business exerts upon a people? It leads to an utter disregard of every rule of moderation and prudent foresight, because by its uncertainty it defeats their operations. There is an instability of values that defeats all plans, and a consequent insecurity which finally resolves all trade into sheer speculation. Continuous and steady industry is mocked, and deprived of its fair reward, which idleness and extravagance are often seen to gain. Then comes impatience of moderate and slow profits, and of the time and labor required for production; and this it is which has emptied the rural districts, and filled the cities with young men seeking and preferring precarious employment, which has run up the number of Wall street "operators" from one hundred and forty in 1860 to upward of two thousand at the present time.

The destructiveness of the spirit of gaming is too well known to need remark; and public policy has compelled gambling to be held illegal, and has sought to punish the practice by penal enactments.

And why is this? The money staked upon the fall of dice or in the turn of a card may honestly belong to the individual who stakes it, with which he may lawfully do as he sees fit; but the effect of gaming is to destroy all sense of relative values, and to render a man incapable of distinguishing between them. He recognizes in chance the goddess who will come to his relief in time of need and peril, as surely as did the tutelary divinities who watched and aided the heroes who figure in "the tale of Troy divine."

The primeval decree may seem sometimes to be successfully avoided, but sorrow will ever attend the escape, as it generally does the attempt. "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread." And since those words were first uttered human industry and human happiness have been inseparable companions, and attempts to divorce them prove rarely successful.

If any country can escape this divine law, the United States of America is not that country. In older countries wealth, the result of the labor of former generations, accumulates, so that the men of the present day are born rich; but here we have little or no accumulated wealth. Our colonists but two centuries ago found forests where now stand our oldest towns; and the West—the young, the growing, and the glorious West—is younger than the men who stand here today representing her interests. The people of the United States are in every sense a working people, and the only danger arises from their feverish haste, their impatience to force the country in a single generation, per saltum, into an equality of wealth and advancement with the oldest nations in Christendom.

But, Mr. President, I have been but repeating truisms, and have done so in order to exhibit by the contrast of what has succeeded in the last five years how little regard has been paid, and by many is now proposed to be paid, to the essential conditions of true political economy.

Mr. Secretary McCulloch, in his first report after the close of the war, on the 4th of December, 1865, expressed the opinion—

That the legal-tender acts were war measures, passed in a great emergency; that they should be regarded only as temporary; and that they ought not to remain in force a day longer than would be necessary to enable the people to prepare for a return to the gold standard; and that the work of retiring the notes which have been issued should be commenced without delay, and carefully and persistently continued until all are retired.

In the same paper he stated that the circulating medium of the country was altogether excessive, and added:

It is the opinion of the Secretary, as has already been stated, that the process of contraction cannot be injuriously rapid, and that it will not be necessary to retire more than one hundred, or at most two hundred, millions of United States notes, in addition to the compound notes, before the desired result will be attained; but neither the amount of reduction nor the time that will be required to bring up the currency to the specie standard can now be estimated with any degree of accuracy. The thing to be done is to establish the policy of contraction.

The wisdom of these suggestions was manifest, and was immediately followed by a resolution of Congress, in March, 1866, in these words:

That this House cordially concurs in the views of the Secretary of the Treasury in relation to the necessity of a contraction of the currency, with a view to as early a resumption of specie payments as the business interests of the country will permit; and we hereby pledge our co-operative action to this end as speedily as possible.

That resolution was passed almost unanimously—144 votes in the affirmative, and but 6 in opposition.

Mr. THURMAN. What is the date of it?

Mr. BAYARD. The date of that resolution was March 15, 1866.

The policy of contraction was further illustrated by the passage of the act of the 12th of April, 1866. That act provided—

That of United States notes not more than $10,000,000 may be retired and canceled within six months from the passage of this act, and thereafter not more than $4,000,000 in any one month.

And under that direction and authority the Secretary of the Treasury continued to reduce the amount of circulation until January, 1868. He had by that time reduced the amount of outstanding notes $44,000,000. They had been "retired and canceled," as the public supposed and as the law directed. In January, 1868, the speculators raised a cry, and Congress gave temporary aid by stopping the contraction. They did that by a bill declaring—

That from and after the passage of this act, the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury to make any reduction of the currency by retiring or canceling United States notes shall be, and hereby is, suspended.

But by the time of this interference by Congress in this declared and steadily followed policy, the Secretary had reduced the volume of currency by canceling and retiring $44,000,000 United States notes. If the country doubted the power of Congress to issue such notes and make them legal-tender, and looked on in wonder when the Supreme Court decided such a power did not exist, and at the same time reversed its own decision, with what amazement did we behold the issue in 1872 of $5,000,000 of irredeemable paper money, and in 1873 of the issue of $28,000,000 by the Secretary of the Treasury, upon his sole individual discretion and authority, without warrant of law—nay, against the plain letter of the law!

Mr. President, I was greatly surprised the other day to hear the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOUTWELL,] who has been so large a part, if not the whole, of the controlling power over this question of currency in the action of the Treasury in the past five years, state that in the issue of $28,000,000 by the present Secretary of the Treasury of these notes that were supposed to have been canceled and retired he was but exercising a lawful duty and a just and legal discretion. It is true the Senator alleges different reasons than he did when Secretary of the Treasury. When he was called upon by the House of Representatives to state by what warrant $5,000,000 were issued in irredeemable notes in the fall of 1872, he wrote, under date of the 13th of December:

In reply I have to state, that the amount of United States notes in circulation was increased in October last upon the order of the Assistant Secretary, (Richardson,) then acting Secretary in the absence of the Secretary of the Treasury, in the sum of about $5,000,000 over the amount outstanding when the act of February 4, 1868, became a law.

That act of February, 1868, was the act restricting the further retirement and cancellation of issues, and was passed to prevent the contracting policy which Congress had approved, and which Mr. McCulloch was justly and properly carrying out.

The object of the issue—

Says the Secretary—

was the relief of the business of the country, then suffering from the large demand for currency employed in moving the crops from the South and the West. The condition of affairs then existing in this country seems to me to have warranted the issue upon grounds of public policy.

Not a word, then, that it was in accordance with the provisions of law, but that there was some vague discretion, some high public policy that lifted the action of the Treasury from out the sphere of law, and placed the issue and retraction of currency at the pleasure and will of the Secretary of the Treasury. But the other day, in a speech that is as yet withheld from publication, and of which therefore I have not the precise language before me, the Senator said it was in pursuance of a lawful power, and he referred the Senate to what he was pleased to term an adjudication by the Supreme Court upon this subject. I propose, Mr. President, to examine what the Senator termed an adjudication upon this question. He cited the case of the Bank vs. The Supervisors, to be found in 7 Wallace, page 29.

Mr. SHERMAN. What is the date of that decision?

Mr. BAYARD. The decision was at the December term, 1868.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before the act of 1869 was passed?

Mr. BAYARD. O, yes; before the act of 1869.

The Chief Justice delivered the opinion of the court. The question in controversy was whether the State of New York could constitutionally lay a tax upon the greenback notes of the Government held as property by her citizens. In considering that question the court stated historically the issue of these notes:

The act of February 25, 1862, provided for the issue of these notes to the amount of $150,000,000. The act of July 11, 1862, added another $150,000,000 to the circulation; reserving, however, $50,000,000 for the redemption of temporary loan, to be issued and used only when necessary for that purpose. Under the act of March 3, 1863, another issue of $150,000,000 was authorized, making the whole amount authorized $450,000,000, and contemplating a permanent circulation, until resumption of payment in coin, of $400,000,000.

There the honorable Senator stopped. There he found his decision, as he was pleased to call it. Look at the next sentence:

It is unnecessary here to go further into the history of these notes, or to examine their relation to the national-bank currency. That history belongs to another place, and the quality of these notes as legal-tenders belongs to another discussion. It has been thought proper only to advert to the legislation by which these notes were authorized, in order that their true character may be clearly perceived.

That is to say, there was a recital of the history of the legislation of the country in regard to the currency that went as far as was necessary to reach the point to be decided in that case. And what was the point? Whether these notes were property which was taxable by the law of a State. The court decided that they were instrumentalities of the Government of the United States which it would be dangerous to permit State legislation to affect by taxation. That was the sole question decided; and who before ever heard not simply a dictum, not even an obiter dictum, but the mere recital of a portion of history, and expressing that portion necessary for the consideration of the case, to be held up to the Senate of the United States and the people as an adjudication of the legality of a reissue by the Secretary of the Treasury, upon his own volition, of Treasury notes which had been by law "retired and canceled" under the avowed policy of contracting the volume of the paper currency.

But, Mr. President, let us look a little further into this. I have before me a compilation by the present Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Richardson, of the public debt and national banking law, valuable I believe for the purpose of reference; certainly its authority will not be questioned in the present discussion. At page 35, chapter 3, of this book we have the history of the United States notes. The three statutes under which these notes were created are set forth, and the history of the retirement of the notes is set forth.

Congress passed the act of April 12, 1866—

Three years after the passage of the last act mentioned by Chief Justice Chase, in his review of the history necessary for the purposes of the case, in 7 Wallace—providing "that of the United States notes not more than $10,000,000 may be retired and canceled within six months from the passage of this act, and thereafter not more than $4,000,000 in any one month," and the Secretary of the Treasury thereafter continued to reduce the amount in circulation.

Now, sir, what words were used? He was to "retire" and "cancel." These are words of common use; they are words of adjudicated and ascertained meaning. A "canceled" note means a good note no longer in existence. Here let me say that when Congress used that language in respect to the duty and the power of the Secretary to retire and cancel currency, they used the same language, or less forcible, in regard to his power to retire bonds. In section 4 of the act of July 14, 1870, it was enacted—

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, with any coin in the Treasury of the United States which he may lawfully apply to such purpose, or which may be derived from the sale of any of the bonds, the issue of which is provided for in this act, to pay at par and cancel any 6 per cent. bonds of the United States of the kind known as five-twenty bonds.

And in the next clause of this section—

But the particular bonds so to be paid and canceled shall in all cases be indicated and specified, &c.

Why, sir, are the American people hereafter to be startled by the announcement that the bonds which have been "paid in and canceled" have been again issued under an implied authority of Congress? And yet there is just as much right and as much law for the Secretary of the Treasury, if he considers himself guided and limited by the language of an act, to issue the bonds which have been so "paid and canceled," under the act of 1870, as to reissue the notes which have been "canceled and retired" under the law of 1866.

Let us go a little further. When Congress decided to stop this policy of contraction, when the speculators of the country found that it was interfering with their transactions, Congress did it, and they showed that they knew how to do it in fit and proper language. The act of February 4, 1868, provides—

That from and after the passage of this act, the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury to make any reduction of the currency, by retiring or canceling United States notes, shall be, and is hereby, suspended.

It would seem that the words there were plain enough for any man who understands English to know what was the intent and meaning of "retire" and "cancel." It was the reduction of the volume of currency. But what else follows?

But nothing herein contained shall prevent the cancellation and destruction of mutilated United States notes, and the replacing the same with notes of the same character and amount.

Sir, there is no rule of construction more universally accepted than that "the expression of one thing is the exclusion of another;" and when the Congress, speaking of reducing their debt by the cancellation of notes, said that it should cease, and then provided for the cancellation and destruction of mutilated currency, and said it should not cease, but it should be replaced by notes of the same character and amount, it would be an abuse of terms—it would be an affront to the common sense of men—to suppose that it was not the intent, plainly expressed, that when you said "retired and canceled," you meant retire and cancel, and not reissue, unless reissue was expressed upon the face of the same law. Why, Mr. President, if this case were to arise between private citizens in the courts of this country; if I had authorized my agent to issue promissory notes for me, and it was published that his limit was to a certain amount, and then I called him again as publicly to retire and cancel those notes, and he had retired and he had canceled them, where would be the court, where would be the jury, where would be the law or common sense of justice that would hold me bound for the act of my agent when he reissued those canceled notes, and said that I had given him implied power to do so?

I will only say, that for alleged violations of law far more technical, far less flagrant, this Senate, upon the motion in part of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, then a member of the other House, have, within a few years, summoned the chief Executive Officer of the United States to their bar to plead in answer to an impeachment.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I think the Senator from Delaware has not observed the express authority in the act of March, 1863, to reissue in place of notes canceled.

Mr. BAYARD. That power was controlled by subsequent legislation.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Will the Senator allow me to read it?

Mr. BAYARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I only desire the Senator to see the whole case:

And in lieu of any of said notes, or any other United States notes returned to the Treasury and canceled or destroyed, there may be issued equal amounts of United States notes, such as are authorized by this act.

Those were legal-tender United States notes—what are known as the greenbacks. Now, then, the point, and the only point, I wish to make is, that by implication that statute could not be repealed by the statute limiting the reduction to $356,000,000.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, all statutes in pari materia are to be construed together; and if in 1863 there was a statute relating to the currency, providing for its volume to a certain extent, and in 1866 there was a statute passed in direct words for the reduction of the volume of that currency by retirement and cancellation, who shall doubt that the law later in date must and shall prevail.

Let me come, however, to the action of the Treasury Department within the law, for the wisdom or impolicy of which the Administration must answer, and the country must benefit or suffer deeply.

What has been the policy of the Treasury Department since April, 1869, to the present time?

We had an outstanding total debt of $2,588,452,213.94. About $2,200,000,000 of this (in round numbers) was in bonds; $356,000,000 in legal-tenders and sundry certificates of indebtedness and other forms of debt, bearing, I believe, 3 per cent. The Secretary of the Treasury purchased, from April, 1869, until September, 1873, in excess of the amount required by law for the sinking fund, which was 1 per cent. upon the total amount of outstanding indebtedness, $182,241,750 of the bonds of the United States. The interest saved during this period was $35,285,358.

What did this saving of interest cost the country?

Can the ex-Secretary deny that if, in March, 1869, he had continued the avowed policy of returning to specie payments by the most direct and natural route, and not of merely paying off the bonded debt not yet due; if he had, by accumulating gold or by a loan, given evidence of his intention to contract the volume of paper money so that specie payments should be reached in 1871, not only would the premium on gold have fallen far more rapidly than under his very indirect assault, but we should without doubt have been upon a specie basis for more than two years past.

First. The ex-Secretary has mulcted the country $23,061,766 for the premiums be paid on these bonds not due. It could have been saved, and it is a poor consolation to say we sold gold during that period and received a similar amount for premiums on the gold so sold, because the gold was furnished by the people, who had to buy it in the first place at a premium still larger. The loss is then upon the people.

Secondly. Assuming that we would have been upon a specie basis in July, 1871, the case stand thus:

Two years of imports, 1871 to 1873, were paid for in gold, (excluding imports of bullion:)

1871-'72, merchandise	$626, 595, 097
1872-'73, merchandise	642, 136, 210
Total for two years	1, 268, 731, 307
Duties paid in gold, 1871-'72	216, 370, 286
Duties paid in gold, 1872-'73	188, 089, 522
	1, 673, 191, 115

The freight on this merchandise to the United States was paid in gold, and averages 6 per cent. upon the value of the merchandise. The Senator from Massachusetts the other day, in accounting for the supposed balance of trade against England, first said it amounted to 8 and afterward to 6 per cent. I have chosen to state it at his own lowest figure. That would amount to $76,123,877. We paid at the same time two years' interest in gold on bonds of the United States held abroad. That amounted in round numbers to $100,000,000. We have, therefore, during those two years paid at a gold valuation $1,849,314,972. The average premium on gold during the years 1871 to 1873 was a fraction over 14 per cent.; hence it follows the people of the United States had to raise additional money—$258,904,096 more than they would have had to use and pay had our currency been upon a specie basis in July, 1871. The Secretary's policy stands, then, thus:

Savings of interest on bonds purchased from March, 1869, to July, 1873..	$35, 285, 358
And for this benefit the country has paid premium on bonds purchased.	$23, 061, 766
Premium on gold for imports during the same years	258, 904, 096
	281, 965, 862

Pyrrhus exclaimed after the battle with the Roman Fabricius, "One more such victory and I am undone."

Our imports in gold value, including gold interest to foreigners, cost us over $900,000,000 per annum in 1871 and 1872; and even at 10 per cent. premium on gold, (more nearly 12 to 15 per cent.,) is it not evident that over $90,000,000 more currency was annually required by the community than if we had been at specie payments? At 14 per cent. premium on gold, the average for 1872 and 1873 would have required $126,000,000 additional currency. Now, Mr. President, I submit as an axiom that the volume of currency must be greater as the premium on gold increases, in order to equalize paper to gold. If A has $10,000 freight to pay in New York, (of course in gold,) he needs $11,000 of paper; and if he borrows $11,000, must pay interest on that sum.

It may be asked, could the Secretary have provided means during the period from April, 1869, to July, 1871, safely to enable the Treasury to resume specie payment? When he went into office in April, 1869, he found in the Treasury—

In gold, not subject to warrants	$60, 000, 000
Customs receipts in 1869–'70	194, 538, 374
Customs receipts in 1870–'71	206, 270, 408
	460, 808, 782

This was subject to interest on the public debt—

For 1869–'70, in gold	$130, 694, 242
The same in 1870–'71	130, 694, 242
	261, 388, 484

Thus leaving a balance in gold that might have been left to accumulate above needful expenditure up to July, 1871, of $199,420,298. The total greenback issues were $356,000,000, and the above $199,420,298 would have been actually and practically a gold reserve of over 56 per cent., which means that we would have had fifty-six dollars in gold to redeem a hundred dollars in greenbacks, which is more than double the reserve established by law for the national banks, and at least 16 per cent. more than the strictest prudence requires as reserve in the banking business—stated usually at 30 per cent.

But, sir, the year 1874 has come, and how do we stand? The "policy" of the ex-Secretary has been continued since he left office, and here upon the floor of the Senate we heard him still speak with admiration of his achievements. Unfortunately his speech of last week is still withheld from publication, and I can have no access to his corrected copy; but I noted the remark in the course of that speech that "any policy looking to specie payments" was dangerous. Is it possible that even "a look" of hope and anxious expectancy is to be denied to the American people? What "policy" has brought us to the condition that forbids even "looking to specie payments?"

I admit the situation is most critical and the condition of the Treasury most unsatisfactory. It had better be empty than hold what alone it holds, the currency which by law was "canceled and retired" and, without law and against law, is being reissued.

In strange association in the same speech was the boasted reduction of our bonded debt with the statement that we could not now even look "toward specie payments," and that our condition gave us the alternative of "dishonor or increased taxation."

Sir, the people will hear this in wonder from the lips of the ex-Secretary. I fear he has shattered the financial idol of the many households who have read from month to month, for four or five years, the glowing reports of his triumphs in the redemption of a debt not due nor called for, with that indomitable disregard of present cost or certain consequences which some men less reverent might term "the fanaticism of finance." "Dishonor or increased taxation!"

Poor Emmet said, "Let no man write my epitaph." But if I mistake not, the ex-Secretary has written his own as a financier, and it is in the closing words of his late speech, "Dishonor or increased taxation." Hic jacet.

It cannot be denied that the honor and good faith of the nation are pledged, without words or resolutions, to pay all just debts, express and implied, in parol or under seal.

It is said of an honorable and honest man, "his word is as good as his bond;" and a nation is but many men combined.

Some suggestions, if not rising to the dignity of argument, have been made to show the Treasury notes known as "greenbacks" are but promises to pay at no given time, and, having no time stated for payment, can be in good faith postponed forever if required by the maker. I need not say this would not be law, as between private citizens of the United States, in any court in the Union. A note payable at no fixed date is a note payable on demand.

But the Supreme Court have decided the character and meaning of the "greenback." In the case which the honorable Senator, supposed to be an authority for his proposition to reissue paper money without warrant of law, in the course of the decision in the case of Bank vs. Supervisors, (7 Wallace, 30,) the Chief Justice considered that question; and it was a question distinctly necessary to be decided in order to come to any decision in the case. The very able and ingenious counsel, no one less than Mr. Charles O'Conor of New York, clarum et venerabile nomen, had raised the point before the court that this note was intended to be the only lawful money in use, and being money, and therefore property, it was not an instrumentality of credit of the United States, but it was absolute money per se, and therefore could be taxed as other property of the citizen.

Said the Chief Justice:

> The dollar note is an engagement to pay a dollar, and the dollar intended is the coined dollar of the United States; a certain quantity in weight and fineness of gold or silver, authenticated as such by the stamp of the Government. No other dollars had before been recognized by the legislation of the national Government as lawful money.

Let us have an end, then, Mr. President, of this wretched quibble, so dishonoring to us as a Government, that when we say we mean to pay a dollar we mean to give a promise for some other dollar that shall in like manner evade the grasp of the hand stretched out to receive it.

Now, this currency of the United States is the basis of all of our credit; it is our common measure of value for bonds of the Government, and the bonds and mortgages of individuals. All are based upon it. It is legal tender for all debts, public and private, and all credit in every shape is built upon it. Elevate your currency, which is the foundation, and you thereby elevate your superstructure of national credit in all its shapes.

Let me ask the Senate what kept down the price of United States bonds in Europe during the war in this country?

First. The doubt as to the result, whether failure or success would ensue to the Government of the United States.

Secondly. After the question of success was settled, whether the debt and interest would be paid in depreciated paper or in gold coin.

The first question was answered by the complete and final military triumph of the United States Government.

The second was answered by the resolutions of Congress and the declared policy of payment in coin, sustained by the popular votes.

Now if to these two facts had been added the virtual redemption of the currency by making it convertible at will into coin, there would have been an end to the least possible objection to placing United States bonds on the highest level of credit in the markets of the world. And even now, if we could only have a currency convertible into coin, who can doubt that our bonds would rise in full proportion to the rise in currency; and then the proud boast of the Senator from Massachusetts would be nearer the truth, for then the consols of Great Britain would stand but little higher in their own market of London than would the bonds of the United States Government.

These are calculable losses to the American people; but how shall we estimate what our greater losses have been by reason of continuing an irredeemable, depreciated currency? If we had had specie payments in 1871, how enormous our saving! The benefit to the morals of the public would have been incalculable. How much of wild speculation and consequent ruin would have been prevented! There would have been for two years no gold-room in New York, and those vast speculations in locking up of gold and currency which have appalled legitimate dealers would have ceased. There is no such institution anywhere else in the world as a gold-room, which has no parallel for its demoralizing influences except in Baden-Baden, Homburg, and Monaco. A policy which would relieve us even of that alone would be worthy of some considerable sacrifice.

I have spoken of one of the evils of the continuation of this depreciated currency, founded upon credit alone, without intrinsic value, as being its fluctuation in value. Let me illustrate how sadly that works, and how all these losses will eventually be piled upon the consumer. We have, in round numbers, $770,000,000 of paper money, the value of which is continually fluctuating from day to day. When it is considered that a change of 1 per cent. on this vast sum causes a loss somewhere of $7,720,000, and that thus, without an exchange of values, each such fluctuation causes this sum to change hands, the dangers of the continuance of such a system will be better appreciated.

Who loses this? Not the merchant or the trader, for he will readily and willingly raise the prices of his commodities to correspond with the advance in the gold premium, and the advance, like all increases of cost, falls upon the consumer, and chiefly upon the poorer consumer, who can only buy in small amounts from day to day, and is unable to make new contracts for his labor, which is all he has to exchange, and the price of which cannot be rapidly adjusted to meet the shiftings in value of such paper money. Indeed the loss to the poor consumer is far greater than the original advance in the premium upon gold.

When from any cause, artificial or otherwise, arising from the natural exigencies of trade, or the raid of some of the brood of those gigantic speculators whom the war and paper money have combined to create in this country, the premium upon gold is suddenly advanced, the importer of merchandise raises the price of his goods to protect himself, the jobber to whom he sells does the same thing in his turn, and so on each successive hand pursues the system until from

New York to Colorado at least 10 per cent. is added to the cost, eventually to be paid by the consumer, although the first fluctuation was but 1 per cent.

Let us, Senators, face the truth as it exists and help to make the people understand it. Even if it be unpalatable, they had better know it, and in the end will thank you for it.

Mr. Spaulding well states the situation in 1869, and what he said in his Financial History of the War is true of to-day:

> Viewed simply as an economical question, the immense war debt represents only lives and property consumed. All the unproductive labor, vast material of war, provisions and supplies of all kinds, are used up, wasted, and blotted out of existence. This immense debt, rolled up during four years of bloody war, stands out in bold demand upon the nation for liquidation from the future earnings and income of the people. Future labor and economy must furnish the means for its payment.
>
> * * * * * * * *
>
> This sum must be paid, principal and interest; not by the issue of new promises to pay it, but by the production of actual value, measured by gold and silver—the world's commercial standard, as well as the standard regulated by law.

Sir, these are solemn facts, well stated; and it seems to me as if the energies and the ingenuity of a vast body of the so-called friends of the people have been exerted for many years to make an unpalatable truth stand in the guise of pleasure, of some pastime, of some advantages, instead of being what it is—war is waste, and debt is a curse.

Mr. President, there was much of wit and wisdom in one of the many maxims of Maginn, the author of the O'Doherty Papers, and the applicability of which has struck me in the course of this debate. One was, "That we hear much of the horrors of intemperance, but few seem to consider the terrors of sobriety."

This nation has had its period of wild excitement, in which every stimulus, moral, physical and financial, has been freely indulged in. These should have ended with the war, from which period, perhaps, they were inseparable. But with the return of peace and its calmer influences reason must regain her sway, and the pleasures that accompany intoxication must give way to the temporary terrors, as Maginn termed them, of returning sobriety.

The process is, of necessity, uncomfortable, and resistance in many quarters not unnatural. Thus we have the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERRY] begging for a few more glasses from the flowing bowl of paper issues, of that which cheers and likewise inebriates; and his friends from Indiana, Illinois, and Iowa, [Messrs. MORTON, LOGAN, and WRIGHT,] lustily joining in the cry, and proposing, as I understand them, to order in an indefinite number of bottles and "make a regular night of it."

Mr. President, in order to justify this continued use of stimulus, moral and financial, to the people, we have had charming pictures of prosperity drawn for us of the condition of the United States. From my heart I wish they all were true; but my reason tells me that they are false; that there is the habit, not an unnatural one, of those owning property to overestimate its value. A familiar illustration of this was given me by a gentleman lately from England, who is a resident of one of the thriving towns of the interior of the State of New York. He told me the price of real estate in many parts of the city of London was, as a rule, less than in many of the favorite parts of the town of Binghamton. I could make the same comparison in respect of my own limited knowledge of the value of property in London, and property in the city of Washington, or in Wilmington, Delaware. And this I doubt not is the common experience of all who have given this subject any consideration, and applies to all our towns and cities in the Northern States. It is a system of puffed prices, of exaggerated values, that is purposely kept up for various reasons, and chief among them the idea of making people happy, by making them believe they are rich and prosperous when they are not.

Sir, what a response to all this is to be found in the resolutions of the sundry "granges," so called, which give but little indication of prosperity in western agriculture! The men composing these organizations are not the drones of society, nor the turbulent spirits that so often, and without due cause, keep society in a ferment; nor the hangers-on of political parties, pleading for place and awaiting the opportunity for plunder that comes in times of confusion and disturbance. No, sir; they are the real producers of wealth, making two blades of grass grow where one blade grew before; the real architects of a country's wealth, whose industry is the source of those virtues that make and keep a nation strong.

On the peninsula bounded by the Chesapeake and Delaware Bays I know that farming is very unremunerative, and but for the fruit culture the condition would be deplorable. Yet we have a fair soil, a temperate climate, and a population equal in skill and industry to any in the Union.

Lately, a substantial, experienced, intelligent farmer in Delaware expressed to me in strong terms his inability to farm at a profit, and said our farmers would not be able to compete with those of the West until the latter were obliged to buy fertilizers for their lands. I reminded him that in Delaware farmers had the market of New York almost at their doors, and that five cents per bushel was the margin between the New York Corn Exchange and our purchasing depots; that the enormous cost of transportation from the West took all the western farmer's profit; that when we in Delaware sold corn at seventy cents, the Illinois farmers burned theirs for fuel.

I mention this merely to show how universal is the cry of distress sent forth by agriculture in every section of the country. I say nothing of the South, for her distressed condition has been well described by one of her own sons, my friend from Georgia, [Mr. GORDON.] A book by a northern man, lately published, has the suggestive title of "The Prostrate State." How sadly eloquent! speaking volumes in three words. Did not the Senator from Massachusetts speak ironically when he referred to the prosperity of South Carolina?

What an answer to the loud trumpeting of prosperity and wealth all over the country which we heard the other day from the honorable Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON,] are the reports of the meetings of the unemployed poor in the eastern as well as the western cities; of lawlessness madly seizing railways and holding them by force to obtain the just dues of honest labor; of strikes; of processions of men asking for work and bread; of deputations to the President of the United States from Louisiana, asking that Army rations may be served to the starving people of that State; of the statements made on this floor by Senators from Missouri, from Georgia, from North Carolina, all telling of poverty and distress, and asking for relief.

When I look at the national debt, in all its forms—the largest, in proportion to the accumulated property of the country, of any nation in the world; at the debts of the States; of every county in every State, and of every city in every county; at the corporate debts, so vast that nearly 50 per cent. of all the railroad companies were unable to meet their interest this fall and winter; at the individual debts, covering farms and houses, country properties and city properties, with crushing mortgages; when I see the whole country staggering under taxes to meet these public debts—does it not seem, as Voltaire said, "that this people have discovered the secret of owing more than they possess, and of living as though they owed nothing?"

The more I have reflected and considered the results, the more I do desire to retrace many of the steps taken during the war and the years of confusion which have followed it in centralizing power, and to contract the functions of the central Government, and leave the administration of their internal affairs more and more to local self-government, which is the life and soul of a free people.

The growing disposition and tendency seem to be, to look to the central Government for the performance of functions which should be left to individual enterprise and local control. This disposition has prompted some parties to place under governmental control our currency and entire system of banking. We are made aware of schemes to place the whole system of electric telegraphy throughout the Union under the finger of the Postmaster-General, and have savings-banks for the people's money established at every post-office under the same central management. Then come propositions to combine all the railways in the country into a single institution of "Commerce between the States," and hand it over to the Department of the Interior. Then, as education is an important subject, we are to place the question broadly under governmental control, paving the way by large donations of land, and finally giving some Superintendent of the Bureau of Education supervisory powers over every child in the country, releasing parents from all individual responsibility.

I do not see what subject of human cognizance is to escape the vortex of this system. Marriage and the nurture of children are kindred questions, which the Federal power may be called in to control.

When you supersede individual responsibility you interfere with individual liberty. The law of competition is the law of liberty; and monopoly and tyranny are synonymous. We have partial monopolies already in the shape of corporations created by law; but let us not convert our Government into a vast and complete monopoly, in whose shadow individual liberty will wither and die.

The individual man is to be educated by competition and struggle into self-reliance, and self-education is the best; his own natural powers are his best instructors; his very failures are his best lessons. And if you substitute a paternal government to smooth the path before him, you will dwarf and wither his faculties. And if this be true of individuals, it is true of communities of men; to be kept strong they must be exercised in the duties of self-government in everything that can rationally be left to their own control.

This local self-government was the lesson of the Saxon Alfred, well named "the Great;" and the system of laws that established it, and are part of our inheritance, have preserved more of civil and religious liberty upon the earth than any other human code. It subdivides power, and teaches men to oppose its concentration.

Mr. President, how shall we shape our course financially to let it rest firmly upon the broad principles that I have endeavored to state and to define? It is not for me to propose a specific plan for the resumption of specie payment. It would be highly presumptuous in a member of a weak minority in this body to be thus assuming the functions and the duties of the financial head of the Government. I can but promise an honest criticism and a hearty support to any measure which I believe will even tend to place us once more on the firm ground of specie payments. But I will say what I believe can be practically accomplished, always premising that a rigid economy in all departments of governmental expenditure should accompany the experiment; that the enormous and superfluous body of Government employés should be reduced, and good behavior in subordinate officials made the sole condition of their official tenure.

In the first place, I believe that great advantage would accrue at once to the people and to the Government by divorcing the banking system of the country from the United States Treasury Department.

Their mutual dependence is unwholesome, and the experience of the last fall has shown that it forms no safeguard against panic or against the results of financial disturbance, but, on the contrary, that it serves rather to increase them.

In 1873, in the month of February, we had a debate upon a bill from the Committee on Finance, the passage of which I favored, providing for the circulation and redemption of United States bonds, and looking to the restoration of specie payments. A remark fell from the honorable chairman of that committee [Mr. SHERMAN] in regard to the power vested by this system, and by our permission of law, in the Secretary of the Treasury. It was in reply to a question from the honorable Senator from Missouri, [Mr. SCHURZ,] in regard to the power of the Treasury to accumulate greenbacks and control the money market of the United States. In describing the powers of the Secretary of the Treasury, the chairman of the Committee on Finance used this language:

He may hold the gold and accumulate it. He may sell the gold and accumulate the currency. He may in that way destroy the business interests of the country, and this bill will not change it in the slightest degree. Indeed, all our laws relating to the Treasury depend upon the fidelity and integrity of the Secretary of the Treasury. If it is to be presumed that he will do anything harsh or improper, to promote his own interests, or political interests, or any other, then, as a matter of course, necessarily, he has the power to do it.

Then I interposed:

May I ask the honorable Senator from Ohio, in the face of such an admission as that to the Senate, whether we can be too quick in placing the Secretary of the Treasury under the limitations of law, for I think it is a terrible power that the Secretary of the Treasury shall have the welfare and the business of the country subject to his displeasure and subject to his caprice? If he has the power to make or break the business interests of this country, then I would say to the people of this country, the sooner they put limitations upon him the better it will be for their safety and his own.

My friend from Ohio proceeded to answer by the exceedingly handsome proposition that if I would sit down with him for five minutes he would be very glad to have me join him. As I said at that time, there was an embarrassing amount of power awarded to me, which I was not accustomed to. At the same time I will only say that I shall be very glad to exercise my ingenuity, with the aid of the great abilities of my friend from Ohio, to bring the people of this country and their finances to a condition when the Secretary of the Treasury shall know that he is the creature of law, and that he has no power except that which law gives him, and that if he breaks the law he shall be amenable to the law at the hour of justice as much as the humblest citizen of the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. I want to ask my friend from Delaware this question: Whether in a time of surplus revenue, when the Secretary of the Treasury was not pressed as he is now, there is any doubt about the power of the Secretary of the Treasury to accumulate the surplus currency that comes into the Treasury? Instead of applying it to the purchase of bonds, might he not accumulate it in the Treasury, to the embarrassment of business? I ask whether that power is taken from him by any act?

Mr. BAYARD. That is a very long question, and not to be answered in a breath. If my friend will permit me, I will continue the thread of my argument, however weak, and try at some time hereafter to assist him in coming to a practical answer to his question. He cannot, however, deny the truth of the saying of Lord Camden, "The discretion of the judge is the law of tyrants." The discretion of a Secretary is no protection to the liberties of a free people.

Mr. President, there has been throughout this discussion constant reference to and comparison with the Bank of England and the financial management of that country with our own. The Bank of England is a great machine of finance, governed with great wisdom, controlled by men having the deepest interest in its results, and of the largest practical experience. I believe that we may learn much from the financial history of England, or of any other nation; but I do not think a parallel can be justly drawn between the operations of the finances of England, especially under such a concentration of power as exists in the Bank of England, the representative of an imperial system, and the banking system in a country like our own, which is not a consolidated empire, but which is a Union of independent and sovereign States. Conveniences, as we all admit, result from a concentration of executive power. Every man feels that there are impediments to convenience in those very checks that keep us free. We must give up some of the advantages of one form of government in order to secure the greater advantages of another. Theirs is a monarchy and a government of consolidated and imperial power. Ours is no such thing; and may the day be long distant before attempts to make it so shall be successful.

In the first place, can there by the wit of man be an amount of currency fixed which shall under all circumstances be sufficient for the purpose of the business of the country? It is admitted that you may fix an amount. If it be too great, it is redundant, and will inflate prices, and disaster will follow. If you make it too scant, you will produce a contraction that will embarrass the natural operations of trade. There must be somewhere what is termed, to use a latter-day phrase, elasticity. I believe that is the favorite phrase of the honorable Senator who now occupies the chair, [Mr. FERRY, of Michigan,] and I suppose it to mean, divested of its mysteries, something which shall be able to meet an exceptional strain upon the finances. There has been so much of good sense on that subject expressed in a report made by the then Comptroller of the Currency, Mr. Hulburd, in 1869, that I shall cite it as conveying, in better terms than I can command, my own views upon that subject:

No human intelligence can fix the amount of currency that is really needed, for it is continually varying, and is never fixed. If Congress limits the amount there will always be those who will be dissatisfied, and who will seek legislation, either for the purposes of contraction or expansion; and so long as the volume of currency depends upon legislative enactment, uncertainty and instability will pervade all financial operations.

If, however, notes for circulation are issued by a banking association composed of business men and capitalists, who are obliged to furnish security for the prompt and easy conversion of their issues into coin on demand, no other limit to the amount of such notes need be fixed than that imposed by self-interest. If there is a legitimate demand for currency, the notes will remain in circulation long enough to make their issue profitable. If there is not such a demand the notes will be hurried home for conversion into coin. In this way the business demand for currency will get its supply, and the surplus, if any, will always be retired.

A self-adjusting system of currency is the only one that is adapted to the exigencies of trade and to the wants of the country; and it is a vital question at this time whether this result can be reached before the return of specie payments.

Now, sir, I desire to see, by the most direct and practical route, a return to specie payments. I do not believe that it is in the wit of man or the wisdom of Congress to fix a rigid amount of currency for the use of this people; and I do not believe that a self-adjusting system can be arranged in connection with our present system of national banking.

To this end, and for economy to the people, I would gradually call into the Treasury and cancel and convert the national banking currency into United States Treasury notes. The $336,000,000 national-bank notes to-day constitute a forced loan upon the people at a cost to them of $25,000,000 annually, which, in my opinion, had better be paid into the Treasury and thereby that amount of taxation be spared to the people. I propose that the national-bank currency should be replaced, as fast as it is called in and destroyed, by United States Treasury demand notes, in order that there should be a unification of the currency and the advantage to the people of a loan to themselves, of the interest upon which, if any were paid, they themselves would get the advantage.

We therefore would have, in the first place, the unification of the currency, and the people would have the benefit in the shape of interest of the forced loan of paper currency, which would all accrue to the public Treasury.

At the same time I would have a system of gradual and steady contraction looking to a resumption of specie payment; and as to the date of that, it is not so important. The question is to make the proper step, a step in the right direction, no matter how short that step may be, and then take no step backward. It would be comparatively unimportant whether demand notes of the Treasury should be issued in lieu of this national-bank currency, or that notes payable in coin in three or five years without interest, or with some small rate of interest which would not deprive them of their capability for use as currency in periods of pressure and necessity. Accompany this by a law directing the funding of the United States currency in bonds at par, a regulated amount in every month, so that by the time stated for the resumption of specie payments there should have been such a reduction in the volume of the currency as would make the coin by that time accumulated in the Treasury an ample reserve to respond to all demands upon it for conversion.

Let it not be said that this would be unjust to the national banks. Nothing is further from my mind than that injustice should be practiced toward them. But I do not forget that the system was the compulsory creation of war; that they were forced to give up better charters in order to become subscribers to the national loans. I have nothing to say about the policy or rightfulness of the measure, but when I speak of it as a war measure and as a compulsory measure, I describe it precisely according to the truth. I desire no interference with the present banks. I desire no recall of their charters; and no injustice would be done. The United States bonds which they hold and which were made the basis of their circulation are greater in value than when they purchased them. From the date of their purchase they have received 6 per cent. in gold upon the full amount, and they have likewise enjoyed the interest upon the currency that was handed to them for the purpose of discounting the notes of the people. There would, then, be no injustice, because they would be left with their capital not only unimpaired but increased in value, which can well become the basis of their banking operations under any other system which may be devised.

Mr. President, there must be something radically defective in the banking system when such a panic as we witnessed in September last could have occurred. We have had suspensions of specie payments before; we have had panics before; we have had runs upon banks before; but no man in this country ever before saw the entire system of banks through the country not only suspending payment of specie, or that which was the basis of their own circulation, but suspending even promises to pay, suspending payment of even paper currency of any value, and depriving the people suddenly of that circulating medium which is essential for the convenience and business of mankind. This was, in my opinion, because the banking system and the Treasury of the United States were bound together; the reserves of the Treasury and the reserves of the banks constituted in fact but a single reserve. Touch that at any point, alarm that in any quarter, and the alarm spreads through all, and the consequences spread through all. It was, on the whole, an illustration of the folly of violating that homely adage which advises that all the eggs should not be put in a single basket.

It seems to me to be the part of wisdom to leave the banking system in this country free, and let the laws of the several States revive the charters of the old banks, and grant new charters to those who desire them. Free banking was a feature in most of the States of this Union. A liberal grant of charters to all respectable persons was the universal feature in this Union. There was no trouble upon that score; and, as I said before, all this property of United States bonds, of greenbacks, of gold, of any shape of the public debt, forms a perfectly useful and available basis for banking in any part of the United States, perhaps more convenient, perhaps more desirable, than any we ever had before for the especial purpose.

I do not doubt that the United States currency, when convertible into coin, will be preferred to coin. Every man knows it to be so. No man would encumber himself with the weight and the awkwardness of coined money when he could take the token which would insure its presence on demand and carry it in the smallest compass.

As a measure to accompany all this, there should be a repeal of the tax upon State-bank issues. Is it to be said there is fear of excessive issues? On that subject I will call the attention of the Senate to our history on this subject. Before the war we had no United States currency. All the paper currency of the country was the issues of our State banks. They regulated their reserves, they regulated their issues of paper, upon the basis of what Mr. Hulburd properly calls "self-preservation." What did it amount to? In 1861 the circulation of paper money throughout this Union amounted to $202,000,000. From 1854 up to 1861 there was an average but little, if at all, in excess of that amount. Yet what was to prevent an excessive issue? No law; no inspector running down to examine the accounts of the banks; no officer justified in opening safes and examining any book or entry which might there be made. No, sir; it was the wise law of self-preservation, regulated by the power of local self-government in the States, that restrained and punished any abuse. If there was safety then, and if in the seventy glorious years of the history of this country that preceded 1861 there was no abuse, you are not to premise and presume that it would occur now.

This country has increased in population, I believe, in the last decade about 25 per cent. Granting the fact that 25 per cent. additional population needs a 25 per cent. addition of currency, you would still have but $50,000,000 added to the $202,000,000, and we have today in this country, or would have were the national-bank issue recalled, a paper issue of $356,000,000 in United States notes. If that be not sufficient, look to the States; look to the self-governing sense of the people; look to the dictates of the law of self-preservation of the people, at the proper time and in the proper way to make those issues which shall give the so much desired elasticity that my friend from Michigan [Mr. FERRY] seeks. They gave it before; they can give it again; and I will presently show there is no fear of incompatibility, of inconsistency, or of clashing between the paper money of the State banks and the paper money of the United States Treasury.

But, Mr. President, may I stop here for one moment to confute what I think is a gross error, that because the business interests of the country are enormously increased in scale, therefore, pari passu, the paper money of the country must increase? Why, sir, what has increased the business of the country? The developments of the power of steam, the developments of the power of electricity, the invention of the system, for it is of comparatively modern date, of clearing-houses, of settling balances by balances. Therefore, if there should be, which I deny entirely, any parity of reasoning between the proportion of increase of currency and the amount of business transacted, I answer that these very discoveries of modern times have made the facility for exchange so much greater that in truth and effect a much less amount of currency can conduct a larger amount of business than it could have done before the discovery of steam and electricity and the machinery of clearing-houses. Of all the enormous balances transferred in the clearing-houses of London, so many times in excess of any sums known in this country, 98 per cent. of all that is cleared is not represented by a farthing of coin or a paper note; it is all upon the system of adjusting balances through the means of exchanges. The cry, therefore, that because the country has increased in population and increased in the scale of its business operations, currency must rise to an equal magnitude with the latter, I think is entirely unfounded and entirely without reason.

Now, Mr. President, what are the benefits to the people of a localized currency? By giving that currency only a local credit you designedly restrict its circulation to the point where it was issued and at which it was intended to be used. What is there objectionable in that? Is there anything in principle? I answer distinctly, no. The coinage of every nation on God's earth is based on the principle of making that coin most useful in the country where it is issued. There is not a nation of the world an exception to that fact. They stamp the coin with the insignia of their own government. They subdivide it in amounts suitable to their own currency and their own population, and to that extent they discourage its floating off to other nations. There is scarcely a coin that will pass current for its nominal and ascertained value by the law of its country in another country for the same amount. I do not think one can be named. There are approximations, but there are no precise equivalents, unless, perhaps, our trade-dollar or some similar coin to that, which was lately coined as an experiment and for special purposes.

We have affirmed the wisdom of the policy of creating a money that shall only have local credit by deliberately debasing the silver coin of the United States with the avowed purpose of restricting its circulation to the United States. Why did we debase our silver money? To keep it here among our people. This is a historical fact, and it is the avowal of a sensible principle.

I would give to the people of any locality the right upon their own credit, and subject to the great overruling law of the Constitution, which forbids any State to make anything a legal tender for debts but gold and silver, and therefore prescribes that no paper money shall be issued by a State or under State authority which shall not be convertible at will into gold and silver coin of the United States—subject to such restriction, subject to such right of convertibility, I do hope to see the time when the people of the various States of this Union, exercising the great right of local self-government, shall be enabled once more to have such currency as will command credit and respect at home, and which they will not be inconvenienced by losing by absorption by the great money centers at the very moment when it most is needed at home.

What is there inconsistent between the presence of the notes of the United States convertible into coin and the notes of the States convertible into coin, floating side by side in the same community, of equal value because either can be converted at a moment's call; the United States note with its larger range of circulation, the State note with its restrained range of circulation? Where is the confusion? Where is the awkwardness? Where is the impolicy? Where is the absence of any principle? As I said before, you have the history of the world in its coinage; you have the special example of the United States in this silver coinage of purposely debasing or decreasing the value of their coin money to keep the coins at home where they are needed, and convenient for the purposes of the people.

Sir, we are not without experience as to these conveniences, and there never was a time when such a convenience would answer so many useful purposes as now. We cannot fix a rigid amount and volume of United States currency. It cannot be done for safety, and for reasons which I have endeavored to set forth. There must be some source of supply of currency in times of need. Where can that be so safely trusted as to the people of the States and of each community, where they may exercise this essential power of local self-government, in regard to a matter which touches immediately their own interests, and the errors of which their own self-interest will instruct them how to cure?

Mr. President, there has been created by the late war a brood of capitalists, and, still more than by the war, by the system of irredeemable paper money, a brood of capitalists, who sit in the great money centers, like pirates on a high rock waiting for a sail. When we shall have reached convertibility of our currency into gold and silver coin, when we shall have given back to the States this right of regulating a currency adapted to their local necessities, and remitted to them those powers of local self-government which ought never to have been interfered with; when that time comes, the occupation of these gentry who make corners upon the Treasury, who embarrass the banks, who assail legitimate traders, will be gone. So long as the national Treasury and the national banks hang upon the same thread, in which the reports of the Treasury, being public, can be known; in which the reports of the condition of the national banks can be known; so long as that exists will these vast speculators have the knowledge and the data by which they can arrange in times of want and emergency to corner the Government itself, the banks themselves, the citizens, and so force the prices of commodities up or down according to their own plans. But let the State system be restored; let us have the currency of the United States Government convertible into coin; let us have that to the extent, I say, even of four hundred or five hundred millions of dollars, (and I venture to fix no amount, but simply would say that any deficiency can be made up by the State issues for local purposes,) and there will be no knowledge—and there will be no means of knowledge—for such speculation to upset the honest business of the country. It will cease. There will be no possibility of favoritism in the Treasury Department; there will be no knowledge of any kind to give one man, as they term it, "the inside track" over another, and the opportunity and possibility of making these vast changes and producing these shocking and disgraceful results which we have seen, such as the "Black Friday" of 1869, and the like, which will become things of the past, no longer possibilities in the history of our finance.

And furthermore, then the capital which is now so illegitimately used for these pernicious practices will be compelled to seek more honest channels, and the legitimate business of the country will be relieved from this unequal competition for money. What has distressed your farmer; what has distressed your manufacturer; what to-day makes the South so poor that she needs money for the ordinary affairs of life, and cannot borrow it even upon a fair security? It is because the honest business of this country has been outbid by the dishonest business of the country; it is because your speculators in railways—chimerical, false, unfounded, and unsafe as they were—have gone on and paid rates for money that destroyed the legitimate and honest business of the country. That is the history of it; and I want to see an end of such things. When this competition is destroyed, then money can be borrowed on fair terms; then the business of the country will come back to legitimate channels, and speculation upon the credit of the Government and upon the welfare of communities will no longer be either practicable or reputable, because a better and a higher tone will pervade the community, and people will call men by their right names. A man who succeeds in cornering gold and in locking up specie will not be called a successful or an unsuccessful operator; but he will be called what he is, a public swindler.

Mr. President, I do not feel it necessary for me to fix precise dates when this may be accomplished. I will not say that it can be fully accomplished in the next two years. I believe that I have fairly demonstrated that it could have been easily accomplished in the two years which were worse than wasted—from 1869 to 1871. Those were golden opportunities, but they have passed away, and with them I do not say all hope has passed away, or that the means of accomplishing the desired end has passed away. I only say that because those opportunities were not taken advantage of our difficulties have been increased; and let me say further, that if we are to continue this policy which has been followed for the last two years, if we are to take the step suggested by my friend from Michigan, two years hence will almost have locked the door upon a return to those principles of sound finance which he admits in the abstract are essential to the proper government of the country.

Sir, it is not too late for us to return to financial virtue, from whose paths we undoubtedly have wandered. I do not say that the same long stride and certain return to specie payments can be made in the years 1874 and 1875 that could have been made in 1869, 1870, and 1871; but I say that we can attempt it, and it is our duty to attempt it; and if the process shall be longer; if instead of two years it shall be four years, be it so; and on that subject I will say that I believe resumption in four years practicable; it is perfectly practicable. I believe that enough gold can be accumulated in the Treasury of the United States within the next four years to enable us to resume—a gradual and moderate contraction of United States currency going on in the mean time. We are not called upon to clog our Treasury with casks, and barrels, and kegs, and boxes of the precious metal. We are simply called on to have that which is money on demand, the accumulation of a money credit; and I state to-day to the Senate, I state to-day to my fellow-countrymen, that four years of moderate contraction, four years of cessation in paying debts not yet due, and the principal of which is not desired by those who hold the bonds, will suffice to bring the Treasury of the United States back to that condition where the demand note of the Government shall meet from the Government the honor that it deserves.

Mr. President, I have occupied the time of the Senate much longer than I intended; and nothing but my sense of the grave importance of the issues has made me feel warranted in doing so. Of personal experience in the mere business of banking I can boast but little. In faithful, humble study of the principles upon which the finances of a nation can be safely conducted, I have not been altogether wanting; and what I have advanced upon the subject I have spoken by authority, and not merely of my own knowledge, as the citations I have given the Senate will show.

The theme of our country's glory is an inspiring one. We have given to the world exhibitions of physical power even in a dreadful and gigantic war, where every man who fell was our countryman. If by so dissevered a people such vigor and resources were exhibited, what may be expected from America combined in arms in a common cause, for the common object of the glory, honor, and welfare of our country? I would only ask, conscious as I am of the vast power that slumbers throughout this country, ready to be awakened when the nation shall need it—I only ask that the honor and the reputation of my country shall be equal to her strength; and this cannot be so until every promise to pay every just debt shall be accomplished in substance and in truth.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Mr. President, it was not my purpose to again address the Senate on this subject until after a final report of the Committee on Finance; but it is a subject of such transcendent importance, upon which, in my judgment, the prosperity, the honor, and the public credit of the country are now hanging, almost suspended by a hair, that under such circumstances as these I cannot omit anything that shall seem to be my duty.

This is a question above parties, above sections. It is a question that belongs to the whole United States; and, as such, I hope that we can come together and agree upon some measure that shall tend at least to preserve and perpetuate the honor, the public credit, and the prosperity of our country. I should not, however, have presumed to say anything upon this occasion, perhaps, but for the speech of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOUTWELL,] a speech of remarkable ability, and in its general tone so wholesome that I rather regret that there is anything that seems to me worthy of criticism. He was so nearly right, so "almost persuaded to be a Christian," that I wish he was not only "almost" but altogether persuaded. I am about to show, if I can, that the position of the Senator of "standing still" is impossible, impossible even for himself, and I shall not bring up his record by way of reproach but to substantiate the fact that even he cannot stand still; that in the mad current now raging he has been and will be swept along.

Mr. President, I will read from the Congressional Globe of March 15, 1865. There I find, when the distinguished Senator was an honored member of the other House, a resolution introduced by his colleague, Mr. Alley, in these words:

Resolved, That this House cordially concurs in the views of the Secretary of the Treasury in relation to the necessity of a contraction of the currency, with a view to as early a resumption of specie payments as the business interests of the country will permit; and we hereby pledge co-operative action to this end as speedily as practicable.

On this I find a yea and nay vote, and among the 144 yeas "GEORGE S. BOUTWELL," with only 6 nays. A capital record that.

I now turn to the first report made by the Secretary of the Treasury in 1869. In that report he goes on to say:

While I do not anticipate that it will be necessary to delay resumption until our proper commercial position is regained, I am satisfied that the development of the navigation and ship-building interests will improve the credit and rapidly augment the wealth of the country. The suggestions that I have made indicate my opinion that it will not be wise to resume specie payments while so large a part of the interest-bearing debt of the country is represented by five-twenty bonds, and held by European merchants, bankers, and manufacturers.

Then he says:

In fine, the practical question is not merely the resumption of specie payments—as a measure by itself it is not difficult—but the problem is, to resume under such circumstances that the position can be maintained, not only in times of tranquillity, but also in periods of excitement and peril. Our course, it seems to me, is plain. Every measure of the Government bearing upon the subject should tend to appreciate the value of our paper currency. It is probable that some decrease in the volume of paper will ultimately be necessary, and I therefore respectfully suggest that the Secretary of the Treasury be clothed with authority to reduce the circulation of United States notes in an amount not exceeding $2,000,000 in any one month. Thus will the country be brought, gradually it may be, and yet without disaster, into a condition when the resumption of specie payments will be easy, if not unavoidable.

That, too, was sound doctrine. The next year the Secretary of the Treasury said nothing upon this subject. The year following, or the third year of his administration of the Department, he reiterated these sentiments in these words:

The result of this test concurs with what seems to me to be the best opinion upon the subject, that the amount of paper money in circulation is still so great that it cannot be maintained in value at par with coin. There are two modes of relief: one is to reduce the volume of currency, as was recommended by me in my annual report submitted to Congress in December, 1869; the other mode is to await the growth of the country, and the increasing demands of business, which in time will produce the desired result.

Those were his sentiments not only while he was in the House of Representatives, but for the first three years of his administration of the Treasury Department. In his last report, made in 1872, the distinguished Senator, I regret to say, had changed his policy, and then he said:

The true policy will be found in continuing the national banking system, without, however, yielding to the claim for a material increase of its issues in proportion to the volume of paper in circulation.

There are two effectual and certain ways of placing the country in a condition when specie and paper will possess the same commercial value. By diminishing the amount of paper in circulation, the difference between the commercial value of paper and coin will diminish, and by pursuing this policy the difference will disappear altogether.

All legislation limited in its operation to the paper issues of the banks and of the Government, whether bearing interest or not, and which in its effects shall tend to diminish the market value of coin, will be found, upon analysis, to contain a plan for contracting the volume of paper currency; and all legislation, so limited, which does not contain such a plan, will prove ineffectual.

You will see, Mr. President, that then and there was the first time that my excellent friend became alarmed in consequence of the idea of contraction, and I think the error is generally shared by others. Nearly all who discuss this subject, and who are in favor of inflation, are apprehensive that there will be a great contraction, and do not take into account the amount of gold that will most assuredly be brought into circulation by the resumption of specie payments. They do not take into account even the amount of coin that will be issued and substituted by the Government, nor the amount that will naturally come forth from idle seclusion into active circulation from places where it is now hoarded; or that is now annually produced in the country; or that will come here whenever there is a real demand for it.

Mr. President, let me say one word in relation to the $25,000,000 which by law is soon to be taken from the banks of New York and New England, where they have an excess of circulation according to existing law. For one, as a humble member from New England, no opposition will be made to that withdrawal by me; but, sir, I do not like the manner in which we are constantly taunted with that excess. Even the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON,] constantly engrossed as he is with a large amount of labor on the bankrupt law, on the Louisiana case, and on transportation, as well as financial questions, can yet find time to throw upon New England an occasional reproach about the inequality of the circulation of our national banks that now exist. Sir, what was the supreme reason and occasion for the establishment of the national banks? It was for the purpose of floating our national bonds, to make a demand for them and to give them credit, and the Government had not only to call upon those who had the capital to establish these banks, but upon men who had the loyalty to put their capital into the banks. Our people were urged, almost goaded into the business; and yet shall it be a reproach to them now that they in the time of the country's direst necessity came forward and subscribed and paid for these bonds? Others had the same opportunity, but they either had not the capital or they were unwilling to risk it. I think no one deserves reproaches on this subject.

But, sir, let me say that Senators will find, when they have accomplished that measure, that it is but dust and ashes in their mouths—that is to say, if they are seeking to borrow money and not to lend. What will be the practical result? Every bank that is established has to expend at least three dollars for every two that it can loan afterward. Let me illustrate it. Suppose a bank is necessary or wanted in Indiana, or in any other Western or Southern State; their people must come forward and buy the bonds, and pay, at the present prices, 110 or 111 cents on the dollar for every bond that they buy for the purpose of establishing the bank. Then they get 90 per cent. of circulation. Then they have to retain 15 per cent. as a reserve; so that after all their investment of $110 they have but $75 left which they can loan to the people. And yet it is complained that the people are oppressed because they have not banking facilities by which they can borrow money. Why, sir, we of the Northeast—of New York and New England—will have three dollars to lend, when this thing shall be fully carried into effect, where we have but two now; and whenever it is carried into effect those now so oppressed for want of currency will have one dollar out of every three less than they had before. That is all I have to say on that subject.

Within the last six years, or since 1867, the increase of the fractional currency has been $18,000,000. The amount of increase of bank circulation has been $40,000,000. The expansion by reason of the diminution of the currency held in the United States Treasury has been over $42,000,000. The mistaken use of $28,000,000 of the $44,000,000 once retired and canceled makes $128,000,000 of absolute inflation within the last six years.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Will the Senator allow me to call his attention to the fact that the 3 per cents, amounting in 1869 to $59,000,000, which were held as a reserve and answered the purpose of greenbacks as far as the banks were concerned, have been retired?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. That is true. Still the increase is enormous. But now, sir, the cry is for more; and yet it is notorious that at this moment we need much less. The great operators of the United States, who have consumed so much of capital in the large expenditures for unproductive railroads, are now out of the market. To-day there are $80,000,000, it is said, in Germany invested in our unproductive railroads, and other enterprises of that sort, upon which the interest is suspended and unpaid; and our credit suffers accordingly. Money for reckless ventures, or for any illegitimate purposes, cannot now be had; but more will remain for legitimate business.

The learned Senator from Missouri, [Mr. BOGY,] and the eloquent Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. MERRIMON,] in making their speeches seem to be for and against specie resumption alternately, at one moment denouncing any kind of currency that is not fixed upon a metallic basis, and the next moment calling for a little more of bank or United States currency—just a trifle, or from fifty to one hundred millions more. I was very much reminded of the story of the old deacon who went to church, and when he came home found that his two boys in his absence had been making a large mug of egg-nog. He came down upon them—of course he did—with a good deal of pious thunder, that they should attempt to make egg-nog in his house, and especially on Sunday. The smallest boy, a good deal frightened, early stole out of sight. The oldest one remained with downcast head, and then the old gentleman said to him, "I say, Jack, have you got any of that left? Give us a drink or so of the pesky stuff." [Laughter.] So it is with these Senators; while they are ready to denounce paper currency fixed upon anything but a metallic basis, they yet hold out their hands and say, "Give us a little more of the pesky stuff."

Mr. President, I think Senators who are misleading the farmers of the country with the idea that it is best for them that a paper currency shall continue and be further augmented have made a sad mistake. The Senator from Massachusetts undertook to assert that when the amount of premium was adjusted on the imports and exports of the farmer, it made no difference to him whether a depreciated currency was used or not. I can only say that I think the Senator is wofully mistaken. I believe there is no class in the country who have derived a smaller profit from the issue of the paper currency, or who suffer more from it, than the agriculturists of this country. Other classes may adapt themselves to the currency. Traders and manufacturers are able to adapt their business to the currency; they can fix their own prices to a large extent, but farmers cannot. They must take what they can get. When they sell their surplus of agricultural products they find that their price is regulated by the value of agricultural productions produced abroad that are raised and produced upon a specie basis; and to this end I can show the facts. To-day the agriculturist is not getting a dollar more of compensation for his productions generally than before the inflation of the currency. Let us take, for instance, as a standard—and as well one class of wool as another—say Smyrna washed wool. In 1860 that brought 28 cents a pound; to-day it can be bought for 24 cents. Take another item—and I cannot stop to go through the whole—take mess-beef. In 1860 it sold for $10.75 a barrel; in 1874 it sells for $10.37. In 1860 the price of pork was $13.25; in 1874 it is $16.50 a barrel, or only 25 cents more.

Now, in the face of such facts as these it is utterly idle—if not worse than that—to contend that the agriculturists are benefited by the present vast expansion of paper currency. It is not true. Take cotton. Of course the price of that is regulated by the price abroad, and it will always bring coin or the means of specie resumption. The increasing demand for cotton, and the diminished production of it in India, have kept up the price since the war, and are likely to do so for some time; but it is an article that is entirely regulated by the price that two-thirds of it brings abroad. It is the same thing with wheat and corn. Take corn, for instance, which sold in 1860 for 90 cents, and now sells for 85 cents a bushel.

Therefore Senators need not hug that pleasant idea to the soul that they are benefiting the great agricultural community by continuing paper money; and if they are not benefiting the agriculturists, see what evidence that nobody is benefited we have in the meetings of those engaged in active business throughout the country, representing all portions of the country, in boards of trade, especially that one recently held at Baltimore, the National Board of Trade, which voted on the question of resumption, as we have seen by their memorial, and out of forty-four representatives, only nine were opposed to resumption, and of these there were a majority even from the Western States in favor of it. Take the question in New York; take it in Baltimore; take it in Philadelphia, or in Boston; they all speak with but one sentiment; they are overwhelmingly in favor of a return at an early day to specie payments; and if these men cannot speak for the business interests of the country, who can?

Mr. MORTON. I should like, with the permission of my friend from Vermont, to make one statement in regard to the $25,000,000 provision in the act of 1870, before he concludes his speech.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I did not mean to talk as long as I have; and I would rather the Senator would let me conclude, and he can make his statement after I get through. It certainly does not come in pertinently to this part of what I have to say.

There is another thing that ought not to be lost sight of by the debtors of the country, and that is the rate of interest they are made to pay. Now, I appeal to the Senator from Massachusetts if the rate of interest has not increased in Massachusetts within the last ten years. I know it has in my own State. I know from all accounts it has in most of the other States very largely increased; and only a few days ago we heard a statement by the Senator from Georgia that they were paying 1½ per cent. a month on short paper in Georgia. It would seem to me that the debtor class are paying more of extortionate interest every year on their indebtedness than they would lose upon any possible shrinkage of values by a return to specie payments; and this burden is sought to be fastened upon the debtor class, not only for one year, but for an indefinite period.

Then, again, we are told that we cannot resume specie payments until the balance of trade is in our favor. Even the Senator from Massachusetts indulges in that idea. Why, sir, the balance of trade has hardly ever been in our favor. From the foundation, almost, of the Government it has been against us. But whenever we have had the largest amount of bank paper in circulation, then it has been the most against us. I have here a table that will show the fact, not invariably perhaps, but most conclusively. I will only quote a few instances from it.

In 1839 we had a circulation of about $135,000,000, and our imports were $162,000,000, and our exports $120,000,000. In 1841 our circulation went down to $107,000,000, and our imports were $127,000,000, while our exports were $121,000,000—nearly approximating to each other. Take it in 1849. With a circulation of $114,000,000, our imports were $147,000,000, and our exports were $145,000,000. But in 1851 our imports were $216,000,000, and our exports $196,000,000. In 1857 our circulation was $214,000,000, and our imports were $360,000,000, while our exports were $338,000,000. In 1858, when our circulation was only $155,000,000, our imports were $282,000,000, and our exports were $293,000,000. It will be found, I think, that the position I state is almost invariably in that direction.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Certainly.

Mr. BUCKINGHAM. I would merely inquire whether the exports were not on the home valuation, and whether the value of the things brought to this country was not much larger in consequence of the profits to be added to the foreign market price?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I have no doubt it would be, but all our imports are based upon the foreign valuation; and if freight and profits were added they would be larger.

Mr. BOUTWELL. In this connection I wish to say that, taking the statistics submitted now by the Senator from Vermont, and considering that the exports were on a home valuation, and considering that during a large portion of the period covered by those statistics the tonnage of this country was nearly four or five million tons, and the chief part of the carrying trade in American bottoms, that at least 8 per cent. of the value of the imports and exports accumulated to the credit of the merchants and ship-owners of the United States, against which exchange could be drawn, and it will be seen that the balance of trade in nearly every one of these years, if not in every one of these years, was in favor of this country.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Mr. President, I should not be prepared to admit the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts. My own investigation has satisfied me of the fact that in nearly all cases where the inflation has increased, the imports have exceeded our imports; and certainly now most of our foreign trade is carried on in foreign bottoms.

There is another fact in relation to the inflation at the present time. In 1862 the amount of loans and liabilities of all the banks was $1,012,000,000; in 1874 it is $1,839,152,716.

But, Mr. President, I did not propose to go very far into the subject at the present time, and only rose to touch very rapidly and briefly upon two or three points where I thought my friend from Massachusetts was in error. One point has been so ably discussed by the Senator from Delaware that I shall barely refer to it, and that is in relation to the power of the Secretary of the Treasury over the $44,000,000 reserve; and I must say that it seems to me the report of the majority of the Senate Committee on Finance, however much deference may be paid to the minority report, was made—taking myself off from the majority always—by men whose opinions any Secretary of the Treasury could not afford to disregard. The chairman of that committee has been engaged for twenty years, in one House or the other, on the Committee on Finance; he has helped make all these laws; and in the opinion of the Senate he is competent for his position, for they continue him as chairman of that committee. And there are two other gentlemen on that committee—and I say it with all respect—whose opinions on a legal question of this sort (and I venture to give this as my opinion, for I will not hold to the doctrine that a man who drives fat oxen should himself be fat; not pretending to know much about the law myself, I yet claim to be a good judge of lawyers) are entitled to great consideration; and I say that those two Senators are at least the equal in legal ability for the decision of this question of anybody who has held the station of Secretary of the Treasury for the last fourteen years; and I much regret that any Secretary should have taken the grave responsibility of coming to the Senate and House of Representatives and saying, "Unless you pass a law giving a different interpretation, I will take the responsibility of issuing this $44,000,000 whenever I think it wise or best or it shall be necessary for the exigencies of the Government."

That committee reported "that in the opinion of the Senate the Secretary of the Treasury has not the power, under existing law, to issue United States notes for any portion of the $44,000,000 of United States notes retired and canceled under the act approved April 12, 1866." But the Senator from Massachusetts read a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States on this subject as his sufficient authority, or almost his sole authority, for the action of the Treasury Department—an incidental opinion that was merely a recital of the facts, and only as a recital of facts under the law of 1863, and of course not taking into account any other later laws, three subsequent acts having been passed. Now it seems strange, when the Chief Justice himself placed no importance upon this recital, and said, "It is unnecessary here to go further into the history of these notes, or to examine their relation to the national-bank currency"—stopping at 1863 and not going beyond, because, as he thought, it was not necessary—that anybody else should think it important. It will be noticed that in the original law by which these notes were to be retired it was provided that they were to be "retired and canceled." They were absolutely to be retired; no language can be stronger; and then the subsequent repealing act was merely a suspension of that act—that is, suspending for the time, waiting for a time—and could not necessarily be altered by any power save the power that passed the act of suspension. Any authority for a reissue must be hunted after in an act of later date than the act of suspension.

But, Mr. President, there are one or two points more which I shall notice, and I shall have done. The Senator from Massachusetts finds fault with the word "equivalent" in the resolution which is now pending, and, if I understood him aright, observed that there was no equivalent for coin. I beg to refer him to the opinion of the Supreme Court, and at least he will regard the language of the Supreme Court in the same decision as sufficient authority for the use of the word "equivalent." Chief Justice Chase says, in this same opinion:

> These notes made payable on demand, and receivable for all public dues, including duties on imports, always payable in coin, were practically equivalent to coin.

I think that ought to be sufficient authority for the use of the word "equivalent."

Mr. BOUTWELL. If the bonds which I understand are proposed by the committee as the equivalent of coin were receivable at the custom-houses in payment of Government dues, then exactly that would be true of the proposed equivalent which was true of a certain class of United States notes that were receivable for custom-house dues, and to that extent and for that purpose they were the equivalent of coin.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Then, Mr. President, I will give another authority. Under the law for funding the national debt the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized "to sell and dispose of any of the bonds issued under this act, at not less than their par value in coin." Now, if nothing can be an equivalent for coin, under what authority did the Secretary of the Treasury act? I claim that there are equivalents for coin; and, unless that is admitted, of course the recent action of the Secretary of the Treasury, which I very much commend, in refunding our national debt cannot be defended. He did obtain an equivalent.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I dislike to interrupt the Senator, but he will bear in mind what I had the fortune to say in regard to equivalents, that I dealt with it very much in the sense in which the Senator himself is now dealing with the word. I said that to some persons, under some circumstances, something else than coin would be considered as the equivalent of, or as better than, coin; but the same thing to another person at the same time, or to the same person at another time, would not be regarded as an equivalent, and that you could not say of any other thing that it was the equivalent of coin to all people at all times, in different places, and under different circumstances; but that to some persons at some times it was the equivalent of coin; and that the difference in opinion between this man and that, as to whether coin was more desirable than some other thing, whether some other thing at some time was more desirable than coin, was the essential thing or quality of the human mind out of which flow all the operations of trade.

Mr. SHERMAN. I desire also to read to my friend from Vermont, in aid of his argument, a quotation from the "act to strengthen the public credit," which uses the very words now commented upon:

> The faith of the United States is solemnly pledged to the payment, in coin or its equivalent, of all obligations of the United States.

There the words were used in this very connection.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I go further. I say the faith is pledged for the redemption in coin.

Mr. SHERMAN. But the law says, "or its equivalent."

Mr. BOUTWELL. Very likely the bill says that.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Well, Mr. President, I suppose that the Senator meant to criticise the language in some form to make it objectionable, so that he could not vote for it; but I see that he only means the bark, and does not mean anything that is in the heart of the resolution; and I let that pass.

The Senator from Massachusetts, I know, will pardon me for alluding to him so repeatedly in this debate, because he had a free lance; he attacked and pierced almost all of us, or at least our propositions, and was ready to knock the chip off anybody's shoulder. There was, I believe, not one proposition that had been introduced here which he did not controvert and denounce; and, therefore, I know that he will not find any fault with being somewhat criticised himself. The Senator spoke in relation to the proposition made by me, which was to authorize certificates bearing a small rate of interest in exchange for the reserve held by the banks, which to that extent would not be contraction at all; and then my proposition was to issue, if need be, $200,000,000 of bonds, to be disposed of for gold, in order to fortify the Treasury and to give confidence to the country of its ability in case the balance of trade should be against us. Commenting on that, the Senator said that the country was not strong enough to go through with resumption to specie payments, or something like it, and that it would be impossible to import so much gold from Europe to this country; and he cited, rather dramatically as I thought, a fact that he seemed to regard as conclusive—that the Bank of England had power to prevent it, and had notified the Treasury that that could not be done.

Why, sir, when this panic occurred what could the Bank of England do but to raise its interest? Did that stop gold from coming here? No, sir; not at all. It continued to flow in large sums and rapidly for some weeks. All the Bank of England could do was to raise the rate of interest; but that would not prevent gold from coming here if we owned it and wanted it. It would only attract gold from some other country there, and that would be the only effect of raising the rate of interest. The moment interest is high in London it attracts gold or its equivalent from all over the continent. Those who have it send it there to be invested at the high rates prevailing. But it would not prevent its coming here if we had bought it and paid for it. But, Mr. President, I do not assent to the idea that it would be necessary to bring the gold here, or at any rate a very small amount. I only claim that we ought to have the power to draw against it, so as to keep the exchanges in our favor; and that is all I deem it necessary to say upon that point at the present time.

But there is another point of the Senator from Massachusetts that I wish to allude to. As the conclusion of the whole matter it was represented by him, although, as he said, he had never stated it before, that the reason why we could not resume was our poverty. Well, Mr. President, I confess I was somewhat stunned by the word. Whenever my head or heart refuses to hear the cry of poverty, it will be somewhat changed from what it is at present. But I recovered from that in a moment. I found that he was alluding not to me, but to our country—a country that builds a post-office at New York at a cost of six or seven millions, another at Chicago at a cost of four millions, another at Boston at a cost of four or five million dollars; a country that builds railroads from ocean to ocean; a country that a month ago was ready to go to war and spend countless millions on the point as to whether our flag had been insulted or not. Well, Mr. President, what are the facts? The Senator would represent that we must wait for centuries until we have accumulated the wealth of England before we can resume, for his figure was that Iowa, being a young State, was not like Massachusetts, with two hundred years of the accumulated earnings of an economical and industrious people; and that therefore the United States were not like England with its thousands of years of accumulation. Does not that idea put off at some distance the day of our resumption? Are we to wait for two hundred years or a thousand years in order to accumulate wealth sufficient to resume?

But are we really so very poor? Why, look at the estimated wealth of this country and France and England. The estimated wealth of Great Britain is forty billions, including its wealth and money capital; of France it is forty billions of wealth and money capital; and what is ours? Ours is over thirty billions. We are but in the gristle, and not hardened into the bone of manhood, and yet have three-fourths as much as either of these older nations; and shall it be said that we cannot resume on account of our poverty? The Senator said that he never made that statement before. I hope he will never make it again.

Mr. President, there is a quotation often made from an expression by a man who has done as much to elevate the intellectual dignity of America as any man that lived has done. I mean that massive orator, that comprehensive statesman, whose works are destined to be immortal, Mr. Webster; and I can say this because I did not agree with him after his speech of the 7th of March, 1850. He said:

A disordered currency is one of the greatest of political evils. It undermines the virtues necessary for the support of the social system, and encourages propensities destructive of its happiness. It wars against industry, frugality, and economy; and it fosters the evil spirits of extravagance and speculation. Of all the contrivances for cheating the laboring classes of mankind, none has been more effectual than that which deludes them with paper money. This is the most effectual of inventions to fertilize the rich man's field by the sweat of the poor man's brow. Ordinary tyranny, oppression, excessive taxation—these bear lightly on the happiness of the mass of the community, compared with a fraudulent currency and the robberies committed by a depreciated paper.

Now, Mr. President, I have only to say that I regret that we cannot number among those who are in favor of a return to specie payments, not so early as to bring any catastrophe upon the country, but as early as we can, with due deference to all the varied interests of the people, the distinguished and able son of Massachusetts who now represents her in this Chamber.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont referred to the provision in the act of 1870 which provided that $25,000,000 of national-bank currency should be taken from States having an excess and distributed to States having a deficiency. I want to call the attention of that Senator to the very obvious fact that that provision, from the first, has been a delusion and a snare. It is now nearly four years since that law was passed, and the first step has not yet been taken toward making that change; and now it is very clear that the provision cannot be executed in five years to come.

In 1870, when that act was passed, it required $94,000,000 of increase of national-bank circulation to equalize the distribution among the States, upon the basis of the act of 1865, as applied to the returns of the census of 1870. And now, when the $54,000,000 is all distributed, it still takes $40,000,000, upon the basis as it stood in 1870, to make that equalization; and, as applied to growth and wealth now in view of the increase in the West and South, it would take near $60,000,000 or $70,000,000. I will read what the Comptroller of the Currency said in 1872:

The final distribution of the fifty-four millions will still leave a deficiency of forty millions in different States of the Union, which will require to be filled before the proportion among the several States will be equalized upon the basis of wealth and population.

Now let me call the attention of my friend from Vermont to a provision in the act of 1870 which had the effect to put off any attempt to take this $25,000,000 from the States in excess and give it to the States in deficiency:

That no circulation shall be withdrawn under the provisions of this section until after the $54,000,000 granted by the first section shall have been taken up.

What was the effect of that? That until the last Southern State had taken the share allotted to her, all the other States must wait for the distribution of these $25,000,000. Some of the Southern States were in bad condition. They are now recovering rapidly. The effect of that proviso was to put off the distribution of the $25,000,000 until the last State in the South had taken her share of the $54,000,000. So we have been put off for four years in that way.

Now, go on. What is the provision in the law in regard to the distribution of the twenty-five millions? First, when the requirement is made by the Secretary of the Treasury, the banks in the Eastern States that have to yield up their currency have one year to do it in, that is, to call in their bills, so that they may be canceled and new bills issued to banks in the South and West. So, if the Secretary of the Treasury were to make that call now, the banks would have one year within which to comply; but, notoriously, the banks cannot comply with it in one year, nor can they comply with it in two years—hardly in five years. It cannot be executed, and I can show my friend why it cannot be executed; and to do that I will refer him now to the last report of the Comptroller of the Currency.

When the banks that have the excess attempt to call in their bills, how are they to do it? They can only call them in by offering a large premium for their bills. They are all over the United States. They might offer an equal amount of greenbacks; but the law does not provide for that. They are to retire their own bills. They cannot get them unless they offer a premium for them. They will not do that. What, then, is the Comptroller to do? He is to take an amount of bonds equal to the bills that they are called upon to retire, but have not, and sell the bonds, and then with the proceeds of the bonds he himself is to retire their bills; and how is he to get them? Hear what the Comptroller says about it. I read from the last report:

The notes of these banks are so scattered through the whole country that it will be impracticable for them to return their circulation without an expense not contemplated by the act; and it will, therefore, be for the interest of the banks to provide the Comptroller of the Currency with the requisite amount of legal-tender notes with which to redeem their circulation as it comes into the Treasury. To this extent the act may be executed; but the notes to be redeemed will not come to the Treasury for redemption to any considerable amount; and therefore but a small proportion of the twenty-five millions will be placed at the disposal of the Comptroller for redistribution to the banks of the South and West.

The result will be that, unless there is a premium offered by somebody, these notes cannot be procured in five years, and this twenty-five million provision cannot be carried out. We were forty millions short four years ago; we are now sixty millions short in a fair and equal distribution; and my friend from Vermont argues that we do not need this currency in the West and South; that it is better for us to be without it. It reminds me of the story of the boy who had grabbed all the candy, and when the other boys came in and wanted their share he entered into an argument with them, and said, "Now, boys, candy is not good for you; it will rot your teeth; you had better let me keep it." [Laughter.] Our friends in the East have an excess of this currency. I do not blame them for that. They had the money to take it; and through the gross delinquency of a public officer here they were allowed to take it. I am not complaining of them. I know they do not want to give it up, because they are doing well with it. They have made money out of it. It is well for them that they have it; but it would be well for the States in the West and South to have their share; and all that we are asking is justice. Let that be done.

Mr. SARGENT. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. RAMSEY. Let us have an executive session.

Mr. SCOTT. I hope the Senator from California will withdraw his motion. We should have a short executive session to refer some messages.

Mr. SARGENT. Very well; I will change the motion, and move to go into executive session.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 28, 1874.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

SWAMP LANDS IN HOLT COUNTY, MISSOURI.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on the Public Lands, for immediate consideration, a bill which will not occupy any time.

Mr. GARFIELD. If it will not cause any discussion I shall not object; otherwise I must.

Mr. DUNNELL. The bill is the bill (H. R. No. 320) granting certain swamp lands in Holt County, Missouri, to said Holt County, for school purposes.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

Mr. RANDALL. It is not necessary to read the bill. To save time I make the point, that under the rule it must go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DUNNELL. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] will withdraw his objection. There are particular reasons why the bill should be acted on at once.

Mr. RANDALL. If we have rules, we may as well live up to them. This bill appropriates land, and under the rule goes to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be so referred.

CLERICAL FORCE IN LAND OFFICES.

Mr. TOWNSEND, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on the Public Lands a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office concerning the reorganization of the clerical force of the General Land Office; which was ordered to be printed and recommitted.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. DARRALL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 1231) to abolish the office of deputy commissioner of internal revenue; and

An act (H. R. No. 1382) authorizing coinage to be executed at the mints of the United States for foreign countries.

COMMERCIAL RELATIONS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting, in compliance with acts of August 16, 1842, and August 18, 1856, a report upon the commercial relations of the United States with foreign countries, for the year ending September 30, 1873; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

ASSISTANT TREASURER AT NEW YORK.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a draught of a bill for the relief of the assistant treasurer of the United States at New York City; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GARFIELD. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour now begins at fifteen minutes after twelve o'clock. Reports are in order from the Committee on Appropriations.

ESTIMATES, APPROPRIATIONS, AND PUBLIC ACCOUNTS.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the bill (H. R. No. 1046) to revise, consolidate, and amend the statutes in relation to estimates, appropriations, and public accounts. The committee desire that this bill shall be set for some time, say two or three weeks hence, so that the House may have full time to consider it. If there be no objection, I will name two weeks from next Wednesday, after the morning hour.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I object.

Mr. GARFIELD. Then I move the reference of the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to be taken up whenever it may be reached.

The motion was agreed to.

EXPENDITURES ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the bill (H. R. No. 1561) to reduce the expenditures on public buildings. I move the recommittal of this bill, giving notice that we shall not call it up until about a week or ten days hence.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to ask that this bill be referred to that committee for consideration.

The SPEAKER. That proposition will come in legitimately as an amendment to the pending motion.

Mr. HOLMAN. To enable us to act intelligently on the subject, I hope the bill will be read.

The bill was read. The first section directs the Secretary of the Treasury, until otherwise provided for by law, to authorize no payments out of any unexpended balances of appropriations heretofore made for the purchase of sites and for the erection of public buildings by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department for any of the purposes and objects following, to wit: To pay for any site, or extension of site, the contract for purchase of which has not been executed, or proceedings for the condemnation of which have not been completed, before the passage of this act; to pay for any work or material for the erection of any building upon which work is not already begun or contracted for before the passage of this act; to pay for the sale or demolition of any buildings on any site where work has not been commenced before the passage of this act. The second section provides that until otherwise provided by law the Secretary shall make no contract for the purchase of any new site, nor for material or labor, on any building not actually commenced. The third section directs that all sums heretofore appropriated for the purchase of sites and erection of buildings, under the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department, which are made unavailable by the provisions of this act, be covered into the Treasury. The fourth section authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to suspend work on any buildings already commenced whenever, in his judgment, such suspension can be made consistently with the public service.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust that this bill will not be referred to any committee. The House is very familiar with this subject; and I hope the bill will be put on its passage at once. [Many MEMBERS. O, no!] It is very clear that the present condition of the Treasury requires the passage of such a measure.

Mr. NEGLEY. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to move to lay the bill on the table?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the position of the bill. It is reported from the Committee on Appropriations; and the chairman, [Mr. GARFIELD,] who reports it, moves that it be recommitted, his design being to enter a motion to reconsider, which will enable him to bring it before the attention of the House any day he may desire.

Mr. GARFIELD. In addition to what the Chair has stated, I will say that personally I would be quite willing to put the bill on its passage at once, after proper debate, but for the fact that the city of Boston desires to be heard before the bill is passed.

Mr. NEGLEY. There are some other cities which ought to be heard from.

Mr. GARFIELD. Any gentleman who wishes can be heard on the subject. The committee has set a time early next week when the city of Boston, by its representatives, may be heard on the subject. We feel that perhaps good faith requires we should give this time. I now give notice, if the bill be recommitted, we shall give reasonable time for hearing any party who may desire to be heard, before action is taken by the committee.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman from Ohio allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. RANDALL. I should like to hear, from the gentleman who reported this bill from the Committee on Appropriations, how many buildings there are, and where located, which will be affected by the passage of this proposition, and also the amount of money which it will cover back into the Treasury.

Mr. NEGLEY. And there are other questions which I would like to have the gentleman answer.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. If the gentleman's motion is debatable I would like to make a statement. I have in my hand information which will be a full answer to the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. If the bill be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, that committee will furnish all the information which any gentleman on the floor can desire.

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Speaker, one word on that subject. The Committee on Appropriations have not trenched on the domain of any other committee. They have introduced a bill here, after long and laborious consideration, and hearing fully from the officer in charge of the construction of public buildings. It is not a bill to regulate how buildings shall be constructed, or upon what plans, but simply to say we will not proceed to expend any more money, except within certain limitations, on any of the public buildings which are being constructed under the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department; and, further, that the money rendered unavailable shall be covered back into the Treasury.

Mr. MAYNARD. Does the gentleman propose to allow any other city than Boston to be heard?

Mr. GARFIELD. I say, therefore, that if this bill is taken out of the hands of the Committee on Appropriations, when they have prepared it strictly within the limits of the proprieties of their work, it will be because the House is unwilling to be brought to a vote on this important measure of retrenchment. I care nothing about the mere question of what committee shall have this bill; I am anxious to know whether the House is in earnest in the matter of retrenchment or not.

Mr. W. R. ROBERTS. I hope the gentleman from Ohio, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, will insist upon his motion, for I believe the House will sustain him in it. In my judgment it is time these expenditures should cease.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will say, in this connection, that at the present moment there are thirty-five public buildings either begun or authorized under the control of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department; and the Secretary of the Treasury has said in his annual report that, contrary to the recommendation of the Department—

> Congress has authorized the commencement of seventeen new buildings and the purchase of sites for several others. This legislation, together with the work previously commenced, has imposed an unprecedented and extraordinary amount of labor upon the Supervising Architect's office, and has rendered it necessary to submit estimates in an aggregate sum much larger than I think should be expended in any one year. * * * With the present organization of the Supervising Architect's office, it does not seem practicable in a single year to commence or properly supervise the construction of all the buildings authorized by Congress.

I call the attention of the House to these important paragraphs. The Secretary lays the responsibility upon Congress; and most of the burden properly rests upon us.

In his revised estimates the Secretary has sent us three lists: first, of those buildings which have not been commenced at all; secondly, of those which have been commenced but not far advanced; and, thirdly, all buildings which are so far along that they can be completed, if not during the present, at least during the coming year.

This bill does not touch the third class of buildings, and touches but few of the second class. But it does provide that no work shall be begun on the first class until Congress shall otherwise provide; and in reference to the second class, no further expenditure shall be made out of appropriations still unexpended than to carry out contracts already made and binding on the Government. If we do not retrench here, I know of no place where we can begin. This bill will put back into the Treasury about $2,000,000 during the present fiscal year, and save a still larger sum for next year.

Mr. MAYNARD. I wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio whether the Committee on Appropriations propose to hear from places on this subject other than Boston?

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly we do.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I wish to be heard on my motion to refer this bill to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. GARFIELD. How much time does the gentleman from Virginia want?

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I want all the time I need to make my statement. I want at least ten minutes.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will yield for five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia, chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and then I will demand the previous question.

Mr. NEGLEY. I hope the previous question will not be seconded.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a statement in reference to my motion to refer this bill to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which I ask the attention of the House. In this motion I represent and am acting under the instructions of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; and I think no gentleman in this House can examine the bill reported by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and compare it with the rules of the House of Representatives, and come to any other conclusion than that which I state, that the proper place for the examination and consideration of this question is the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and not the Committee on Appropriations. Everything entering into the propriety of stopping the construction of work on public buildings belongs to that committee; and although we may agree in the conclusion reached, nevertheless, under the rules of the House of Representatives, these duties are imposed upon the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and not upon the Committee on Appropriations.

Now, in reference to the motion which has been made by the gentleman from Ohio to recommit this bill to the Committee on Appropriations, I desire the House to understand exactly what it means. This bill proposes to stop expenditures upon two classes of buildings. It is not proposed here to make appropriation for public work or public buildings—no new legislation in that regard is asked for, but to stop the further construction of public buildings which have been already ordered by Congress, and then to cover back into the Treasury all money which has been appropriated for the construction of these buildings.

The buildings comprised in the first class include, first, the building at Albany, New York, for which there is available $247,233, already appropriated. The other buildings comprised in the first class are at Atlanta, Georgia; Covington, Kentucky; Dover, Delaware; Evansville, Indiana; Fall River, Massachusetts; Grand Rapids, Michigan; Jersey City, New Jersey; Little Rock, Arkansas; Memphis, Tennessee; Nashville, Tennessee; San Francisco, California; and Utica, New York. These are comprised in the first clause as buildings not yet commenced, and the whole amount that will be turned into the Treasury, should this become law, will be $1,270,000.

The second class comprises the following buildings: At Boston, Massachusetts; Chicago, Illinois; Cincinnati, Ohio; Columbia, South Carolina; Hartford, Connecticut; Lincoln, Nebraska; Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; Port Huron, Michigan; Parkersburgh, West Virginia; Rockland, Maine; Raleigh, North Carolina; San Francisco, California; Saint Louis, Missouri; and Trenton, New Jersey.

Now, sir, I submit to this House that matters affecting the construction of these buildings and the propriety of stopping the work upon them belong properly for consideration to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. And I assert, sir, that there is nothing in the rules of the House, and nothing in the law, that can even be remotely construed so as to carry this to the Committee on Appropriations. I ask the House to consider the question, and examine the rules, and to send the bill where it properly belongs for consideration. I insist on my motion to amend the motion made by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] so as to refer the bill to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish simply to remark, that the committee does not propose to stop, by this bill, any building that is in progress. It simply regulates the expenditures to be made on buildings not begun and contracts not made. I demand the previous question on my motion.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio admit the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. Is it in order for me to move my amendment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Ohio does not yield for the amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will allow the gentleman to try it.

The SPEAKER. Then the previous question will first operate on the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. PLATT.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. If the House declines to refer this bill to a committee, will it then be before the House for action?

The SPEAKER. Necessarily it is before the House, to be dealt with in whatever manner the House chooses to deal with it. The previous question, which the gentleman from Ohio has demanded, will, if seconded, first operate on the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, to refer the bill to the committee of which he is chairman—the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. If that is voted down, the question will recur on the motion of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, to refer the bill back to his committee.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The first question is, will the House amend the reference, by substituting the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds?

The question being taken, there were—ayes 127, noes not counted.

Mr. GARFIELD. I demand the yeas and nays. I want to see what the House will do on this question of public expenditure.

The question being put on ordering the yeas and nays, there were—ayes 47.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of those present) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. As I understand, the yeas and nays are ordered on the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia. If that is voted down and also the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, will the bill then come up for passage?

The SPEAKER. It will come up for whatever action the House chooses—to be laid on the table, to be engrossed and read a third time, or for whatever other action the House may choose.

Mr. NEGLEY. But if referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, that is the end of it? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot answer that question. If the bill is referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, it will go there.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 167, nays 76, not voting 45; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albright, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Barnum, Barrere, Bass, Beck, Bell, Berry, Biery, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bradley, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Buffinton, Bundy, Burleigh, Burrows, Benjamin F. Butler, Cain, Caldwell, Amos Clark, jr., John B. Clark, jr., Clayton, Clements, Stephen A. Cobb, Comingo, Conger, Corwin, Crittenden, Crooke, Crossland, Crounse, Crutchfield, Curtis, Darrall, Alexander M. Davis, John J. Davis, Dunnell, Durham, Eames, Eden, Elliott, Farwell, Field, Freeman, Giddings, Glover, Gooch, Hancock, Harmer, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, Havens, Joseph R. Hawley, Hays, John W. Hazelton, Hereford, Herndon, Hersey, Hooper, Hoskins, Houghton, Hunton, Hurlbut, Hynes, Kelley, Kellogg, Knapp, Lamison, Lamport, Leach, Lowe, Lowndes, Luttrell, Lynch, Martin, Maynard, Alexander S. McDill, James W. McDill, MacDougall, McLean, Milliken, Mills, Morey, Myers, Negley, Nesmith, Nunn, O'Brien, O'Neill, Orr, Packard, Page, Pelham, Pendleton, Perry, Pierce, James H. Platt, jr., Pratt, Purman, Rainey, Ransier, Rapier, Ray, Read, Rice, Richmond, Robbins, Ellis H. Roberts, James C. Robinson, Milton Sayler, John G. Schumaker, Isaac W. Scudder, Sener, Sessions, Shanks, Sheats, Sheldon, Sherwood, Sloss, Small, George L. Smith, William A. Smith, Snyder, Sprague, Stanard, Standeford, Stephens, St. John, Stone, Strait, Strawbridge, Sypher, Taylor, Thornburgh, Townsend, Vance, Waddell, Waldron, Wallace, Walls, Jasper D. Ward, Marcus L. Ward, Wells, White, Whitehead, Whiteley, Wilber, John M. S. Williams, William Williams, William B. Williams, Willie, James Wilson, Wolfe, Woodworth, and Pierce M. B. Young—167.

NAYS—Messrs. Barber, Burchard, Cannon, Cessna, Clymer, Coburn, Cook, Cox, Danford, Dawes, Donnan, Duell, Eldredge, Fort, Foster, Frye, Garfield, Gunckel, Eugene Hale, Robert S. Hale, Hamilton, John B. Hawley, Gerry W. Hazelton, Hendee, E. Rockwood Hoar, George F. Hoar, Holman, Hubbell, Hunter, Hyde, Jewett, Killinger, Lamar, Lawrence, Lawson, Loughridge, Magee, Marshall, McCrary, McNulta, Merriam, Mitchell, Monroe, Moore, Neal, Orth, Hosea W. Parker, Isaac C. Parker, Phelps, Thomas C. Platt, Poland, Potter, Randall, William R. Roberts, James W. Robinson, Rusk, Henry B. Sayler, Scofield, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Smart, A. Herr Smith, H. Boardman Smith, John Q. Smith, Southard, Speer, Swann, Tyner, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Charles W. Willard, George Willard, Charles G. Williams, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wood, and Woodford—76.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Adams, Albert, Averill, Barry, Begole, Roderick R. Butler, Cason, Freeman Clarke, Clinton L. Cobb, Cotton, Creamer, Crocker, De Witt, Dobbins, Hagans, Hathorn, Howe, Kasson, Kendall, Lansing, Lewis, Lofland, McJunkin, McKee, Mellish, Morrison, Niblack, Niles, Packer, Parsons, Phillips, Pike, Rawls, Ross, Sawyer, Henry J. Scudder, J. Ambler Smith, Starkweather, Storm, Stowell, Thomas, Todd, Tremain, Ephraim K. Wilson, and John D. Young—45.

So the amendment was agreed to.

During the roll-call,

Mr. CLYMER said: My colleague, Mr. STORM, is necessarily absent; had he been present he would have voted "no."

Mr. McDILL, of Iowa. I desire to announce that my colleague, [Mr. KASSON,] is detained from the House by illness.

The result of the vote having been announced as above recorded, the question recurred upon referring the bill to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. KILLINGER. I ask that the committee have leave to report at any time.

The SPEAKER. That would require unanimous consent.

Mr. NEGLEY. I object.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the bill should not be committed, will it not be before the House for action?

The SPEAKER. If the bill is not referred, of course it will be before the House for action.

The question was taken on the motion to refer, as amended; and on a division there were—ayes 119, noes 58.

So the motion was agreed to; and the bill was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LIFE-SAVING STATIONS.

Mr. HALE, of Maine, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1564) establishing life-saving stations and making appropriation therefor; which was read a first and second time.

The first section of the bill authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint two additional superintendents of life-saving stations, whose compensation shall be at the rate of $1,500 per annum. The second section authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint a keeper for each of twenty-one new life-saving stations upon the coast of Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Virginia, and North Carolina, whose compensation shall be at the rate of $200 per annum; and to employ crews of experienced surfmen at such stations and for such periods as he may deem necessary and at such compensation as he may deem reasonable, not to exceed forty dollars per month for each person employed. The third section authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to divide the coast on which life-saving stations are, or may be, established into such districts, not exceeding the number for which superintendents are now provided by law, as may be deemed best for the service. The fourth section appropriates the sum of $11,086.63 for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the act during the current fiscal year.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is this a report from a committee?

The SPEAKER. It comes from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HOLMAN. I insist that it must go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana makes the point of order that the bill, containing an appropriation, must go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Will the gentleman waive his point of order until I can make an explanation?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent the point of order may be waived, but it is still pending.

Mr. NEGLEY. This same subject is before the Committee on Commerce, and I will ask if this bill has received the consideration of that committee.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I will state that last winter Congress authorized the creation of new life-saving stations along the coast, mainly along the coast of New Jersey, Virginia, and North Carolina, one or two in the New England States, one in Maine, and one in New Hampshire or Massachusetts. These stations have been built; they are all ready to be put in operation. This bill simply provides money to pay keepers and surfmen and boatmen to operate those stations, eleven in all.

The reason why it is introduced now is because the matter of appropriation came before the Committee on Appropriations, and the gentlemen from those States—I hope a gentleman from North Carolina, who takes an interest in the matter, may be present—say that now is the time when these stations become almost imperatively necessary because the stormy season is upon us, and in February there are more wrecks than in any other month, March being also a dangerous month. Now, if this is not done there is no telling when it can be reported and when the men can be put to work.

I will say that the salaries are a matter to which nobody can have any objection. These keepers are not paid as much as the light-house keepers. The Secretary picks out some old sea-faring man who lives near by, and all he gets is $200 a year for keeping one of these stations, and then boatmen and surfmen are employed, and when a ship in distress comes within range of one of these life-saving stations, property and life are saved. Within the last year four hundred and fifty-one lives were saved by these establishments. It is a thing I care nothing about personally, but it is a measure which, it seems to me, appeals to the humanitarian sentiment of the House.

Now, in answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. NEGLEY] as to why this bill is reported by the Committee on Appropriations, I will say that the Committee on Commerce has charge of all measures authorizing an increase of stations; the Committee on Appropriations have nothing to do with that; but when authorized the appropriation must come before the Committee on Appropriations. If the House does not want to pass this bill, and wants to let stations on which we have spent $100,000 go through the season without men to make them of any use whatever, why, of course, that is the privilege of the House; but I do think that, as the bill makes only a small appropriation, it ought to pass.

Mr. PENDLETON. Will the gentleman yield to me for an amendment?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. What is it?

The SPEAKER. There is no necessity for entertaining an amendment until it is known whether the bill is to remain before the House.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I hope the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the last Congress, judging from information I now have, made a mistake in creating so many of these new life-saving stations. I think no harm will be done by taking a few days to examine further into the matter.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. Permit me to make a statement. A number of these life-saving stations are established on the coasts of Virginia and North Carolina, including one of the most dangerous points on any coast we have in this country. I would call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and of the House to the fact that within the last two months of tempestuous weather, such as usually rages at this season of the year, there have been various wrecks on this coast, and already a large loss of life has occurred in consequence of these stations not having been properly prepared.

Mr. HOLMAN. There seems to be some plausibility in these statements, at least sufficient to render it proper to consider the bill now, and I will therefore withdraw my point of order.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I will now hear the amendment of the gentleman from Rhode Island, [Mr. PENDLETON.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 4 the following:
And the sum of $1,600 for medals authorized by joint resolution of Congress approved February 24, 1873.

Mr. PENDLETON. I send the joint resolution to the Clerk to be read.

Mr. KELLOGG. These medals were for saving lives?

Mr. PENDLETON. They were.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution granting medals to Captain Jared S. Crandall and others.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and requested to cause to be made and presented to each of the following persons such suitable and appropriate medals as in his judgment shall express the high estimation in which Congress hold the respective merits and services of Captain Jared S. Crandall, Albert Crandall, Daniel F. Larkin, Frank Larkin, Byron Green, John D. Harvey, Courtland Gavitt, Eugene Nash, Edwin Nash, and William Nash, of the town of Westerly, State of Rhode Island, who so gallantly volunteered to man the life-boat and a fishing-boat, and saved the lives of thirty-two persons from the wreck of the steamer Metis, on the waters of Long Island Sound, on the 31st day of August, 1872.

Approved February 24, 1873.

Mr. PENDLETON. I ask also that a letter from the Treasury Department be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF THE MINT,
January 19, 1874.

DEAR SIR: I omitted to include in the estimate I sent you on Saturday an item which might with propriety be included in the appropriation Congress is asked to make for the life-saving services. Congress, by joint resolution approved February 24, 1873, authorized the presentation of medals to ten persons who, at the peril of their own lives, rescued several persons at the time of the Metis disaster, but made no appropriation therefor. About $1,600 will be required; can you not add it to the $11,000 I have asked for?

Very truly,

S. I. KIMBALL.

Hon. EUGENE HALE,
House of Representatives.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. The proposed amendment of course relates to a subject not in the bill reported by the committee, but as the service for which these medals are to be given was in the line in which this bill was reported I will allow it to be voted upon.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. NEGLEY. I ask that the second section of the bill be again read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to appoint a keeper for each of twenty-one new life-saving stations upon the coasts of Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Virginia, and North Carolina, whose compensation shall be at the rate of $200 per annum, and to employ crews of experienced surfmen at such stations and for such periods as he may deem necessary, and at such compensation as he may deem reasonable, not to exceed forty dollars per month for each person employed.

Mr. NEGLEY. I accord generally with the views expressed by the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE,] except in this: I do not think this bill goes far enough. I desire to know upon what ground the gentleman has proposed this appropriation, and from what Department he received the recommendation for the appointment of these keepers.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. From the Treasury Department and through the Chief of the Revenue Marine Bureau. All of these twenty-one stations have not been finished. This bill applies only to those that have been completed. An appropriation of this size would not be sufficient to cover the expenditures for the whole twenty-one stations running through the entire year. But this appropriation is only for immediate needs, for work to be done at the present time. That is why it does not go further.

Mr. CONGER. The resolution authorizing the establishment of these life-saving stations included the lakes. This bill, however, does not make any provision for stations on the lakes.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. The appropriation bill of last year had the following provision: "For establishing new life-saving stations on the coast of the United States, $100,000." It is under that authority that the Treasury Department has gone on and built these stations. What rule it pursued in building them, how far it is intended to extend this service, I am not certain. But I think that the head of the Revenue Marine Bureau has in mind, if Congress goes on and appropriates year by year, to make this service one that will cover not only the Atlantic and Gulf coasts, and the Pacific coast, but the northern lakes; because, of course, the reason that applies to the one applies to the other.

Mr. CONGER. Now, Mr. Speaker, that appropriation was made with a specific statement of the places where these stations were to be established. I, myself, assisted in urging the passage of the bill; and it received the votes of western and northwestern men upon the very ground that these life-saving stations were absolutely necessary at some points on the lakes for the preservation of life. The gentleman from Maine may remember that I then made a statement of a case in which thirty-three lives had been lost at one point on the lakes. Yet I find that in carrying out the provisions of that act the Atlantic coast has absorbed all these stations. In the bill now before us there is no provision that any of these keepers shall be appointed anywhere except in certain States named. I ask the gentleman from Maine to make his bill at least as broad as the original appropriation contemplated, so that these keepers may be appointed wherever on the ocean or the lake coast they may be necessary.

Mr. NEGLEY. Or on the rivers.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. So fast as appropriations are made, and so fast as stations are built, they can be set into operation. As to the limitation to any particular places, that is a thing I care nothing about. When the Committee on Commerce shall report, or when a general appropriation bill may come up, that will be a fair subject-matter for debate. But I ask the attention of the House to the fact that this appropriation is only for life-saving stations that have been completed and are now ready to be put in operation. Whether the head of this Bureau in the Treasury Department has established them in the right places I cannot tell. I know that he has been very scrupulous in his investigation, and has listened to representations from gentlemen all along the coast. There is nothing in the present bill that appropriates any money outside of the life-saving stations that can be put in operation within a week.

Mr. CONGER. I understood the gentleman to say that this provision was for the whole twenty-one, although but eleven are finished.

Mr. NEGLEY. It is for the whole twenty-one.

Mr. CONGER. Then I understand that one or two of these are to be on the lakes. Therefore I hope the gentleman will modify his bill so as to include authority for the appointment of these keepers, wherever the stations may be.

Mr. NEGLEY. Or wherever they are needed.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I have no objection to such a modification of the bill as will strike out the reference to States and adopt the same language that was used in the act of last year—"on the coast of the United States."

Mr. CONGER. That would be satisfactory.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I have no objection to that whatever.

Mr. SENER. In the bill passed last year providing for these life-saving stations there was a provision which looked to the establishment of the stations at such points on the lakes and sea-coast as were not already provided for; and the report of the Chief of the Revenue Marine Service, which is already before the House though not yet printed, looks to the establishment of these stations as they may be needed on the sea and lake coast of the United States. That report contemplates some of these stations for the lakes, and some for the coast of Virginia, which have not yet been provided for.

Mr. NEGLEY. Will the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] consent to a further modification of the bill, so as to provide that these stations may be established wherever needed?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I would not like to do that, because it would at once raise in the minds of some members an objection that it would be putting too much power in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury to establish these stations anywhere without the leave of Congress.

Mr. NEGLEY. But if the gentleman takes the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury as a sufficient ground for the appropriation, he certainly can leave to the discretion of the Secretary the designation of these places.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I do not consider the mere recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury sufficient, except to bring the matter to our attention, that the propriety of an appropriation may be considered. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. NEGLEY] will not insist on his suggestion, because I am sure it would raise objections on the part of other gentlemen.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.]

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, three years ago, when I brought into the House this proposition for life-saving apparatus and stations, there was a general indisposition on the part of Congress to follow the British system. The Secretary of the Treasury at that time [Mr. BOUTWELL] opposed it, on the score of economy, in one of his reports; and the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES,] who was then at the head of the Committee on Appropriations, thought such a measure unwise at that time. This was three years ago. I remember the occasion well. But the gentleman afterward voted for the measure on the score of humanity. It was then an experiment. It has since been tried, not merely on the New Jersey and the Long Island coasts, under general appropriations, but it has been tried successfully everywhere, not only on our continent, but abroad.

Gentlemen who do not understand this business can see by a single illustration what it means. When a ship is in danger of being wrecked upon a coast in a storm, a rope from the shore is shot out of a mortar over the vessel; a car is then run between the vessel and the shore, and in this manner, as frequently happens, hundreds of lives and millions of dollars' worth of property are saved. Especially in midwinter is this system a great and glorious utility.

In the light of humanity alone, I would not lay a feather in the line of appropriations for this object. But having kept my eye on this matter from the beginning, it has come to my knowledge that appropriations for this object are growing year by year, and should be carefully scrutinized.

What was a good thing, perhaps, for the harbor of New York, or the vessels coming into New York along the Jersey coast and the Long Island coast, or for Boston, or for those coasts where there is a large population and large coastwise trade and traffic, might not be so good for remote sections and coasts, and the expense would be greater. These stations are placed five, seven, or ten miles apart. Generally speaking, in winter there is not the same vigilance and care by the men who keep them, although that is the time when they are most needed. There are complaints that contracts made in respect to boats and buildings, &c., have not received the vigilance they should. I know not how that is, but this matter at least should be carefully considered—I mean the general matter.

If I understand this particular case, buildings are already up, and the money has been already paid out for them in certain places, especially, I think, for these twenty-one stations. All we want now is to appropriate money to pay for men who will be in charge of these stations. The general question of appropriation of several hundred thousand dollars will come up hereafter. How far, Mr. Speaker, that should be extended, is a question for us to determine, and it can, perhaps, be best done in the Committee of the Whole. We have three thousand miles of sea-coasts, we have lake-coasts, we have dangers of the river, and every locality and every coast will be asking for appropriation. Let us, while we examine this thing carefully in view of future appropriations, not stop now on this bill to contest this matter when there is such an emergency as at present.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I am very anxious to get through with this matter during the morning hour.

Mr. WHEELER. Has not the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. WHEELER. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to take up the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Let us get a vote on this bill first.

Mr. WHEELER. I will withdraw my motion if there be no further discussion on the pending bill.

Mr. EAMES. I ask the gentleman from Maine to allow me to offer an amendment, to come in as an additional section.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I will hear the gentleman's amendment read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. —. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to divide that part of the coast known as district No. 2, into two districts; and that known as district No. 3, into two districts; and to appoint one superintendent for each of the said four districts.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I cannot yield to that amendment. I now demand the previous question.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I would like to be heard on this question.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not withdraw my motion unless the previous question is called and the vote taken at once on the pending bill.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I do not mean to say another word, and my desire is to put the matter through as soon as possible. I demand the previous question.

The demand for the previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question first recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Rhode Island, [Mr. PENDLETON,] which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Virginia, and North Carolina," and insert the words "the United States," so it will read "twenty-one new life-saving stations upon the coasts of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HALE, of Maine, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WHEELER. I move the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the purpose of taking up the Army appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. KELLOGG in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of the special order, a bill (H. R. No. 1009) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill will be read a first time for information.

The bill was read in extenso.

Mr. WHEELER. I design, Mr. Chairman, to explain this bill simply, and then to leave it open for the remainder of to-day, and, if necessary, to-morrow, for general debate; and when general debate shall be exhausted, to take up the bill by items for discussion.

In presenting the regular appropriation bill for the support of the Army for the next fiscal year, the Committee on Appropriations invite for it close attention and examination. Economy in public expenditure is now the profession of every lip; its practice is the universal, imperative demand of the hour. The time has passed, for a while at least, when millions of the public funds can, as at some former periods, flow safely through the open sluice-ways of legislation without careful consideration and critical scrutiny. The specter of renewed and increased taxation now haunts every hamlet in the land, and upon us, as possessing the power, and in the exercise of a wise prudence and discretion, the people rely to beat back from their homes the unwelcome reality.

Probably there has been no period in our history when the people were more sensitive upon the subject of taxation, or more keenly inquisitive as to its necessity. The great and, until quite recently, steady reduction of our national indebtedness, and the removal of the greater portion of the burdensome taxation imposed by the war, led the people to believe, with reason, that their long-fettered energies and industries were at length unloosed and the country once more placed upon the sure road to permanent prosperity. The sudden dissipation of these hopes surprises and disheartens them, and all the more, as they are now suffering from severe monetary derangements and the great reduction of values ever, in time, inseparable from an inflated paper currency.

The people are now illy able and illy disposed to bear burdens not demanded by palpable, immediate, pressing necessity. They demand of us to practice here the economy to which they are forced, and to bend to the necessity which overpowers them.

We ought now and here to accept and legislate for the future upon the fact that certain great questions, which have for the past few years overshadowed all others, and to which, for the time, all others were justly subordinated, have been substantially settled. In a certain sense we are called upon to take, in legislation, what our democratic friends style a "new departure." The questions of slavery, of the integrity of the Union, of reconstruction, and the like, are hereafter to live mostly, if not wholly, in the memory, soon, we trust, to be erased even from its tablet, in the closer, more cordial fraternity, the better civilization, the general prosperity and high advancement in everything which exalts and refines a nation, for all which, with wise and just government to foster and aid, the costly experience of the last few years has laid the sure foundation.

With the adjustment of old difficulties comes the era of peace, leaving the people free for the pursuit of avocations which respect their material interests. He is a poor statesman who imagines for a moment that the record of the past, however brilliant or beneficent, can cover present dereliction of duty, or atone for want of fidelity, capacity, and adaptation to grapple successfully with the questions which now confront us. No party can or ought to command the confidence and support of the people which is not equal and faithful to current duties and responsibilities, and whose representatives do not demonstrate by wise action that they exercise their trust broadly, intelligently, effectively, and honestly in the interest of the whole people. He scans the political horizon to little purpose who does not discern this sure sign of the times.

In the preparation of the Army bill the Committee on Appropriations have fully appreciated the responsibility devolved upon them to meet the demands of the country for just, wise, and economic expenditure. The act of last year corresponding with this appropriated $31,796,008. The original estimates for this bill were $34,881,618. These, under the request of the House, were reduced by the Secretary of War to $32,768,716. The Committee on Appropriations have further reduced them by the sum of $4,318,799, so that this bill calls for $28,449,916, which we hope to reduce somewhat by amendments.

Our Army is of necessity expensive. Operating for the most part in regions largely distant and approached with difficulty from commercial centers, its expenses are, by these considerations, greatly enhanced. The Army has now obtained the maximum number of enlisted men permitted by the act of July 15, 1870—thirty thousand. These men at present are mainly distributed in the Territories and the State of Texas.

The committee have carefully considered the question whether this force cannot be safely reduced, not by a summary discharge of men, but by permitting a portion of the natural depletion by expiration of service, death, desertion, and other causes during the next fiscal year to go unsupplied, or, in other words, to check enlistments for that period. An approximate estimate from the War Office of such depletion shows a diminution in the enlisted force of the Army of, in round numbers, ten thousand men.

The bill now under consideration is framed upon the hypothesis that only one-half of this diminution shall be supplied, and if it shall be sustained by the House, a saving of several million dollars will be effected over the revised estimates of the Secretary of War.

A standing army of magnitude is opposed to our traditionary policy and to the genius of our institutions. Our sure dependence in times of emergency must always be upon our volunteer soldiery, upon whom our whole history illustrates we can always confidently rely. Our Indian relations furnish now almost the entire necessity for any considerable standing force. Since the termination of the Modoc war the tendency of most of the tribes seems to be pacific; and from information from qualified sources the committee believe an ample force will remain to preserve the peace with the Indians, and for all other necessary purposes, if limited enlistments shall be made for the coming year.

The money appropriated by this bill can be applied to recruiting the regiments employed in frontier duty, while a diminution of force elsewhere can work no detriment.

The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in his last report, in speaking of the Sioux, the most troublesome of the Indians on the plains, uses this language:

> If it should become necessary to reduce the hostile portion of these Sioux to submission by military force, the Government will find faithful and efficient allies in the several Indian tribes around, the Crows, Black Feet, Gros Ventres, and Arickarees. From these Indians a sufficient number of scouts can be enlisted to break the power of the Sioux nation.

The President has the power under existing laws to enlist a force of Indians, not exceeding one thousand, to act as scouts in the Territories and Indian country, who can be discharged when the necessity for their services shall cease, or at the discretion of the department commander. The efficient and valuable service of these Indian scouts was fully demonstrated in the late Modoc war. This system is every way more economical than the one now pursued, both as to period of enlistment and saving of transportation of men; and more efficient as pitting against the Sioux men thoroughly skilled in the peculiar modes of Indian warfare.

The committee fully appreciate the danger and tendency, in times like these, of legislating toward the extreme of economy, but careful examination and reflection have satisfied them that this measure is entirely prudent and safe. With a proper disposition of troops there will be no difficulty. It may transfer some men from places of ease to the hardships of frontier duty, but they must accept this as one of the contingencies of their calling.

One prominent fact in this connection I desire to impress upon the committee. During the last summer the Government, with a total enlisted force of eighteen hundred men less than now, was able to send off for the entire summer ten companies of the Seventh Cavalry; ten of the Eighth and Ninth Infantry; three of the Seventeenth Infantry; one of the Sixth Infantry, and five of the Twenty-second Infantry, with a force of Indian scouts, aggregating over fifteen hundred men, with all the paraphernalia of war, as an escort to a small surveying party on the line of the Northern Pacific Railroad, from the Missouri to and beyond the Yellowstone River. This army marched over seven hundred miles from any white settlements, and for the time being was withdrawn from their protection. What settlement was molested in its absence? No one would think in these times of furnishing such an escort for the Northern Pacific, even had its work not been suspended. These troops can now devote themselves entirely to the protection of the settlers, if they shall need it.

Independent of this Northern Pacific expedition the Government furnished forces for exploring parties amounting to five hundred enlisted men.

Can it be seriously contended that we need more troops now than in the unsettled condition of affairs which immediately followed the close of the war? On the 30th day of June, 1865, the rank and file of the Army consisted of 19,507 men, and on the 30th day of June, 1866, of 25,215 men. What considerations render a larger force necessary now than then?

No hazard is run in this diminution of the enlisted force of the Army. Any emergency of magnitude would convene Congress, which will be in regular session before four months of the next fiscal year shall have elapsed, when it can take such action, if any, as experience shall have shown to be necessary.

With millions of acres of our best lands in market at merely nominal rates, where men may live in perfect security without Army protection, it is really a debatable question how far the Government ought to go in protecting adventurous men, who push out beyond the bounds of civilization, often for the very purpose of inciting Indian outrages, in order that they may invoke the military arm of the Government, and then profit by the attendant pecuniary expenditures. It would startle the American people, in the present condition of their finances, if they could mathematically compute the expense of protecting the very small minority of their population residing, for example, in the Territories of Washington, Montana, and Dakota. With a population by the last census of a little over fifty thousand, we have now about five thousand regular troops there, or a soldier to every ten souls, at an annual expense of over $1,000 per soldier.

Independently of this, we are constantly paying and feeding the Indians, aggregating millions of dollars every year, to keep them quiet.

These Territories have overdrawn their quota of arms, under the act for arming the militia, in the sum of $30,000, and a like sum was expended therein during the last year for "incidental expenses" attending the management of Indian affairs. And all this is supplemented annually with shoals of "war claims" like those of Montana, encountered by the last Congress, and those of Dakota, of fourteen years' standing, which now confront us.

It were a profitable study to ascertain how our British neighbors over the border manage to avoid these Indian complications and their attendant immense military expenditures.

If there be any force in the legal maxim that a private inconvenience ought to give way to a great public benefit, these daring adventurers ought, if necessary, to come within the limits of civilization, until, at least, we are better able to protect them.

We hear a great deal about the contraction of the currency. A contraction of our population is quite as desirable, if not necessary. The Government certainly ought not to encourage further expansion, especially when an army must precede and follow it.

Aside from the ordinary appropriations of the Army bill, the committee propose certain provisions by way of amendment, the rules having been suspended to admit them for consideration. Among these is one intended to carry to the surplus fund of the Treasury certain balances of appropriations for the Departments of the Quartermaster-General and the Commissary-General of Subsistence, accruing from dates prior to July 1, 1870, and up to July 1, 1872. These balances amount, in round numbers, to $6,000,000. The appropriations from which they remain were made to cover the extraordinary expenses of these Departments during the late war. These balances remain as a standing temptation to all manner of claims, and afford placers in which predatory claim agents and greedy cormorants work too often and too successfully.

As an illustration I state, on the authority of an officer in the Quartermaster's Department, that one claim agent in this city, within the last six months, has exhumed from the State of Maryland alone $200,000 of war claims, the allowance of which he is pressing with all the pertinacity which characterizes the race.

Such temptation ought to be removed; and the Quartermaster-General and the Commissary-General of Subsistence fully acquiesce in the opinion of the Committee on Appropriations, that these balances ought to be canceled. If this shall be done, there will still remain ample balances in the Treasury to meet all legitimate demands accruing since the close of the war.

Another new provision offered by way of amendment to the bill is one intended to carry all claims against the Departments named, growing out of the war, to the commissioners of claims, giving them exclusive jurisdiction.

The history of legislation upon these claims is as follows:

In July, 1864, Congress passed an act denying jurisdiction to the Court of Claims in all cases for property taken, injured, or destroyed during the war by the Army or the Navy.

The same act authorized the Quartermaster-General and the Commissary-General of Subsistence to examine and settle all claims of loyal citizens, in States not in rebellion, for quartermaster stores and subsistence.

In June, 1866, the provisions of this act were extended to the counties of Berkeley and Jefferson, in the State of West Virginia, and in July of that year to the State of Tennessee.

Until the act of March 3, 1871, there was no tribunal for the hearing of claims of loyal citizens residing in the States declared by the President of the United States, by his proclamation of July 1, 1862, to be in insurrection, namely, Arkansas, Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Florida, Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina, and Virginia.

The act of March 3, 1871, provided for the appointment of three commissioners of claims, who should receive, examine, and consider the claims of loyal citizens in the insurrectionary States for "stores or supplies, including the use and loss of vessels."

In May, 1872, Congress extended the jurisdiction of these commissioners to stores and supplies taken or furnished for the use of the Navy.

Lastly, by act of March 3, 1873, the time expired on that day for presenting claims to this commission.

I ask the committee carefully to note that the proposition of transfer does not at all affect the jurisdiction of these commissioners as to subject-matter, or as to claims of which they now have jurisdiction. If that is to be changed, either as to time or character of claim, let it be the subject of an independent bill, upon proper consideration, which the Committee on Appropriations has not given it, as not within their sphere of duty.

The provision for transfer of these claims is a necessary accompaniment to the carrying to the surplus fund of the Treasury of the $5,000,000 of balances before referred to. It would be useless to leave these claims in the Departments, with no money to pay them.

There are now 11,594 of these claims in the Departments of the Quartermaster-General and of the Commissary-General of Subsistence, calling for over $8,000,000. The advantages of transferring them to the commissioners of claims will readily suggest themselves.

First. It will rid the Quartermaster-General and the Commissary-General of Subsistence of a burden which now prevents them from promptly discharging the current duties of their offices. I state this upon the warrant of their authority.

Second. It will confine claimants to one tribunal. Now, foiled at the office of the Quartermaster-General or Commissary-General of Subsistence, they go to the commissioners of claims, and vice versa; and in one instance a small claim was paid twice.

Third. This method sends these claims to one exclusive tribunal, whose sole business it is to examine them, and whose years of experience peculiarly qualify them for their work.

Fourth. This process will submit them to the critical examination and decision of three persons, and then to the ultimate review of Congress. Now they get the consideration of a single officer—Quartermaster-General or Commissary-General of Subsistence—and he embarrassed with pressing current duties.

Fifth. This mode provides a uniform rule for loyal citizens, without regard to their locality.

Sixth. I state, upon the authority of the acting Quartermaster-General, that the adoption of this provision will enable him to dispense with thirty clerks, at an average salary of $1,500 each, aggregating $45,000. The Commissary-General will also be able to dispense with two clerks, and perhaps four.

Seventh. This provision, if adopted, will, after the 1st day of November next, bar all further claims of this nature connected with the war; and the next annual report of the commissioners of claims will enable us to know how many of these claims are outstanding, and whether the Treasury will be equal to their payment.

As these commissioners of claims hold office until March, 1877, they will have ample time to consider all claims which may be brought before them.

I now yield the floor to such gentlemen as may desire to debate the bill, inviting the fullest discussion of its several propositions.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from New York is now referring to the last section of the bill. The subject covered in part by that section has already been before the Committee on War Claims. One objection seems to be urged against this section, that it very materially extends the jurisdiction of the claims commission in a geographical way. It is not confined now to the claims of loyal citizens in the insurrectionary States. The language of the section applies to all claims.

Mr. WHEELER. Without regard to locality.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is urged that almost all these claims have been pending for some years, and the proofs have generally been made in whole or in part; and when they are transferred to the commissioners, it will be necessary for the whole matter to be gone over again; and it has also been suggested that the rules of proceeding of this commission are entirely different from those of the Third Auditor.

Mr. WHEELER. The Third Auditor has nothing whatever to do except to make a mathematical computation of the settlements by the Quartermaster or Commissary General. These claims now rest in the hands of one man.

Mr. HOLMAN. The rules of the Commissary and Quartermaster's Departments are, I suppose, quite different from those of this commission. I am inclined to concur with the gentleman from New York as to the propriety of this section; at the same time I wish to state the objections that have been urged against this section.

Mr. WHEELER. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana that, on a very close examination of this matter, it appears that the rules which regulate the settlement of these claims are almost identical with those adopted by the southern claims commission. They will be turned over just in the condition in which they are at the passage of the act. The commissioners will take them just as far as proof has been made, and if they find that they require further proof, they will make requisition for it.

And I desire to say in this connection to the committee, that one reason why we ask the adoption of this section is to be found in the fact that these claims, aggregating millions of dollars, are now subject to the judgment of one solitary man, and he embarrassed by the current official duties in his Department.

Mr. HOLMAN. Are not these ultimately examined by the Second Comptroller?

Mr. WHEELER. Not at all. If the gentleman will look at the act of 1864 he will see that the Quartermaster-General is the sole judge. That is the law and the fact, as stated to me by the Quartermaster-General and the Commissary-General. Their settlements are sent to the Third Auditor for mathematical review—nothing more. And the committee thought that the settlement of so large amounts as these should not be intrusted to any one man, however capable, however honest. While yielding to the fullest extent these qualities to the Quartermaster-General and the Commissary-General, I say that such accounts should not be left to the settlement of any one man, who is embarrassed by large and onerous duties.

Mr. COX. Will it disturb the gentleman who has charge of this bill if I address a question to him here?

Mr. WHEELER. Not at all.

Mr. COX. The major part of the expenditure in this bill is for the line of the Army, for the soldiers. I would like to know why it is that in this country it costs three times as much to pay for keeping a soldier as it does in Great Britain?

Mr. WHEELER. My colleague is better traveled than I am, and I should suppose that he would know that himself. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. I should suppose that the gentleman, in preparing this bill, had investigated this question of the cost of feeding and keeping the soldier in detail. I will give him the statement on which I based my question, and the gentleman can answer it. I quote from an English paper.

Mr. WHEELER. I am now discussing the general provisions of the bill, and I would suggest that the gentleman should postpone his questions on that particular subject until we reach it in the consideration of the bill in detail.

Mr. COX. Very well; I do not press the question just now.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. I would like to ask the gentleman, who will search through and handle all these papers when the claims are transferred?

Mr. WHEELER. These papers all go by the operation of this bill immediately on its passage to the southern claims commission. Everything relating to the claims is turned over to that commission.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. Who, and how many, will be engaged there to sort them, and examine the foundation of the claims?

Mr. WHEELER. Under the operation of this bill all claims and papers relating thereto will go immediately to the commissioners of claims, and the clerks now employed in their examination will be discharged.

Mr. CLYMER. I desire to ask the gentleman if the effect of this transfer will not be to postpone the consideration of claims arising in States that were not in insurrection, considering the fact that in the southern claims commission now claims from States that were in insurrection have precedence?

Mr. WHEELER. I would, with his permission, correct the gentleman from Pennsylvania. They have no precedence except as the papers are prepared. The commission do not take the cases in the order of presentation, but of preparation.

Mr. CLYMER. The statement is made that there are already some eighteen thousand cases before the commission.

Mr. WHEELER. More than that.

Mr. HEREFORD. Twenty thousand.

Mr. CLYMER. Therefore the effect will be to postpone the consideration of the cases transferred until all those cases are disposed of.

Mr. WHEELER. I have consulted the commission on the subject, and they say they do not consider claims in the order of presentation, but in the order of preparation—that is, as the evidence is furnished.

As evidence of the comparative speed with which claims are disposed of by the Departments and by the commission, I have a statement here which I will submit to the committee. During the last year this claims commission finally disposed of twenty-four hundred and sixty-five claims; during the last year the Quartermaster-General's Department disposed of only nine hundred and sixty-seven claims.

Mr. CLYMER. I wish to state to the gentleman that claims from the State of Pennsylvania have been presented to the Department arising from the incursion into our territory of the rebel armies, and those claims have been partially heard. The parties have been at great expense in presenting their claims, and now if the matter is to be put before another tribunal, the commission, will not the work have to be done over again?

Mr. WHEELER. So far as the papers are prepared, according to the regulations of the departmental officers, they will not have to be prepared anew; they will be taken just in the stage they are.

Mr. TODD. I desire to ask the gentleman a question. I understand him to advocate this transfer on the ground of economy. Can he inform us what is the annual cost of keeping up the southern claims commission?

Mr. WHEELER. I can; the total expenses of the southern claims commission for the last year were $52,800.

Mr. TODD. Then I desire to call the attention of the gentleman to this point. There are now on the docket of the southern claims commission some seventeen thousand cases which have not been acted on. During the three years that that commission has been investigating these cases it has disposed of only five thousand cases.

Mr. WHEELER. More than that.

Mr. TODD. Very little more; perhaps two hundred more; I recently looked at their printed report. There are now on the docket seventeen thousand cases undisposed of; and if I am correctly informed there are now pending before the Quartermaster-General some twelve thousand cases. Now if those twelve thousand cases pending before the Quartermaster-General be turned over to the southern claims commission I want to know how long it will be before they pass on all the claims, and whether it is not practically fastening on the Government this institution as a permanent expense to the Government? I would ask him further, whether there is any economy in turning over to a commission that costs some $50,000 a year work already being performed by men who are paid in another capacity, so that it does not cost the Government one cent for the investigation?

Mr. WHEELER. I will say, in response to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, in the first place, that this commission by act of Congress will exist for three years from next March, and if he will make a mathematical computation as to the progress made respectively by these commissioners and the Quartermaster-General and Commissary-General, he will see that the commissioners will dispose of the claims much sooner than can the Quartermaster-General and the Commissary-General. The figures demonstrate that. The commission is fixed upon the country, wisely I say, for three years from next March, and within that time, according to the rate of progress they have made heretofore, they can dispose of all the cases.

Mr. HEREFORD. Allow me to ask one question.

Mr. WHEELER. I would prefer this discussion should take place when this portion of the bill is under consideration, but I will hear the gentleman's question.

Mr. HEREFORD. Perhaps I misunderstood the gentleman, and, if so, I desire to be corrected. I understood the gentleman to say that the transfer of these cases from the Quartermaster-General's Department to the southern claims commission is recommended by the Quartermaster-General himself. Where does he find that recommendation?

Mr. WHEELER. There is not any written recommendation, but I state it upon my own authority. The acting Quartermaster-General has stated, from the very outset, that the Department could not carry on this work and carry on its current obligations. The Commissary-General says the same thing.

Mr. HEREFORD. There is nothing of the kind in his report; and I gathered the impression from one of the chief officers of the Department that they did not desire the transfer.

Mr. WHEELER. I only speak from the authority of the acting Quartermaster-General. It was my proposition; and when I stated it to him it was indorsed most fully by him.

Mr. LOWNDES. Is it indorsed by the Secretary of War?

Mr. WHEELER. I have never consulted the Secretary of War on the subject. Now, I do not intend to impute that there is any collusion between claim agents and the clerks in these offices; it is not for me to make that charge; but I do say that there is most broad and ample opportunity for it.

Everybody knows that it is utterly impossible for the Quartermaster-General himself to examine these claims; that is done almost wholly by clerks. And I say that, after this lapse of time, when these new claims come in, they ought to undergo the closest scrutiny. All will admit that this commission of claims is doing its work faithfully and admirably well. And, as I have said, if gentlemen will take the pains to make a mathematical computation as to the rate of progress made by these respective offices, they will be satisfied that this business will be accomplished as speedily, and I say better, by the commissioners of claims than by the Quartermaster-General or the Commissary-General.

I will now defer anything further I may have to say until we come to the consideration of this bill by items. I now yield the floor to other gentlemen, simply inviting for this bill the broadest possible discussion.

The committee rose informally, and the Speaker resumed the chair, to receive a

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to the following Senate bill:

A bill (S. No. 89) in relation to the lines of telegraph connecting the Capitol with the various Departments of the Government.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, and requested the concurrence of the House in, bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. No. 59) granting relief to Eva, Etta, Henry, and Guy Carleton, children of General James H. Carleton, deceased; and

A bill (S. No. 204) for the relief of Robert Bent and Jack Smith.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House resumed the consideration of the Army appropriation bill in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, in times like these, when the revenues of the Government have fallen off greatly, and when economy in all the departments of the national Government becomes necessary, on one can be more favorable to reform and to cutting down expenses than I. And no one can be more anxious to correct evils and abuses that may have crept into the public service than I. If abuses exist anywhere, let him who knows the fact point them out, and the evil will be remedied so far as my vote can do it. We owe no higher duty to the country than to initiate a careful scrutiny into all the expenses of the Government, and to hold all public officers to a rigid accountability for the disbursement of money intrusted to them.

The principle is axiomatic that purity and honesty in official life are necessary to secure the perpetuity of national existence. No nation can long survive and withstand the assaults of corrupt and venal officials. The history of nations that have passed from the stage of action fully attests this truth. Their decline commenced with official dishonesty and corruption, and culminated with the debauchery and demoralization of the masses. Therefore the higher the official the more imperative the demand for unscrupulous honesty and fidelity in the discharge of all public trusts committed to him. He should remember that—

> They that stand high have many blasts to shake them,
> And if they fall, they dash themselves to pieces.

Extravagance blunts the edge of conscience and breeds dishonesty, because it creates inordinate desires which honest work cannot satisfy, and therefore it at first attempts to procure by indirection what the law positively forbids. I believe that men, whether rich or poor, who accept and hold offices of trust and responsibility should make it a point to live and support themselves upon the pay and emoluments thereof, for the sake of example; and in failing to do so they weaken the moral fastenings of others less fortunate than themselves, but whose positions are of equal grade and honor.

No doubt the rapid growth and development of the country has caused a proportionate increase of expenses, and opened the doors in many places for corrupt practices. It is charged by some that millions of dollars are yearly paid out improperly, and that the more money is appropriated the less can be shown for it. Do the gentlemen who make these charges know whereof they affirm? If they do, it is a duty which they owe to themselves and the country to lay bare the festering sores and show where the evil is, so that it may be reached and corrected. Where it is, there the pruning-knife ought to be run in. By all means let what can be done to cut down expenses and avert the necessity of levying additional taxation.

But in our efforts to reform the public service and save money we must not let our zeal take us too far. We must remember that we have a great country, and that the just and proper expenses of the country are great too, and that we cannot afford to cut down simply upon the ground of saving money.

The matter before us now is the Army appropriation bill, which in effect contemplates a reduction of the Army. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WHEELER] who has charge of this bill tells us that the reduction upon the estimates amounts to $4,318,799, making the total of the Army appropriations some $3,000,000 less than they were last year. You will observe that the items upon which the greatest reductions are made are those which directly affect the status of the Army. In other words, if you pass this appropriation bill in its present form you in effect direct a reduction of the Army of not less than five thousand men.

According to the Adjutant-General's report, the strength of the Army, as given me by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WHEELER,] is made up as follows: 10 regiments of cavalry, 4,736 men, 473.2 per regiment, 12 companies to a regiment, averaging 39$\frac{1}{4}\frac{3}{3}$ to a company; 5 regiments of artillery, 3,180 men, 656 per regiment, 12 companies to a regiment, averaging 54$\frac{4}{6}$ to a company; 25 regiments of infantry, 12,802 men, 512$\frac{3}{5}\frac{2}{5}$ per regiment, 10 companies to a regiment, 51$\frac{1}{1}\frac{8}{2}\frac{8}{5}$ to a company; engineers, 329; total, 21,047.

The available fighting force of the Army of the United States is 21,047 men, scattered over the country from Fort Preble, Maine, to Sitka, Alaska, from our northern boundaries to the Gulf, in thirty-one States and Territories, and occupying some two hundred posts, averaging but a fraction over one hundred men to a post, besides the arsenals. While, according to reports, 21,047 compose our Army, yet it is a fact well known to Army men that of this force, if any emergency should arise, you could not march much more than one-half, because of the casualties occasioned by camp life. Many of these men are in the hospital and on special detail about the camps. If you were suddenly called upon to concentrate your Army from any cause whatever, and protect the country occupied by our troops, you could scarcely count upon more than one-third of this scattered Army. Many posts could not be abandoned without exposing the lives of the settlers and inviting the depredations of the hostile Indians.

While, therefore, we have an Army of thirty thousand men, it is well to bear in mind that many of the enlisted men are doing the work of clerks, messengers, watchmen, signal sergeants, commissary sergeants, hospital stewards, &c., and saving the Government large sums of money, because the duties which they perform would not cease by a reduction of the Army, but would have to be performed by civilians at a higher rate of compensation. It should be remembered that there are thousands of claims to be disposed of through the War Department, occasioned by the war, relating to bounties, back pay, pensions, Freedmen's Bureau, prisoners of war, &c. The adjustment and settlement of these claims cost the Government large sums. They are charged to the Army, and of course swell Army expenses. These expenses cannot be cut down at this time, unless the statutes are changed relating to these meritorious claimants. Our troops are so scattered that you could not, without great expense, turn out a funeral escort for one of our distinguished generals, should one die. There is no such thing as a regiment at one place. Regiments in many instances are hundreds of miles apart.

The artillery soldiers occupy mainly the fortifications along the sea-coasts, and have the care and responsibility of millions of property. Look at the few men who take care of the valuable munitions of war; to reduce the number would be to consign this property to destruction. It would be better to stop building new fortifications and procuring armaments therefor, if we cannot afford to pay the soldiers to take care of them. The system of fortifications is undergoing a radical change; science and invention are traveling so fast as to render almost useless what was regarded as nearly perfect ten years ago—or even five years ago. The Secretary of War says in his report to this Congress:

> I feel great hesitation in recommending increased appropriations at this time, but I deem it my duty to say that the armament of our sea-coast defenses, which involves the question of the defense of our principal sea-board cities from attack, in case of war with a naval power, is a subject demanding the earnest attention of Congress. The principal cities on our coast are in a very defenseless state, and the tedious and costly work of preparation cannot be commenced on the breaking out of a war with the hope of accomplishing any adequate result. The work must be done in time of peace, without waiting for an uncertain period in search after perfection in gun-constructions. The importance of this subject increases with the earnest and continued efforts on the part of all nations to supply their forts with the most improved armament; and should war find this country without a proper defense against iron-clads and their great guns, the responsibility cannot rest on this Department, as the importance of the subject has often been brought to the attention of Congress.

No age has surpassed this in marvelous inventions. Especially is this true with all that relates to war on land and sea. On the 8th and 9th of March, 1862, one little iron-clad, the Monitor, with a battery of two guns, could go to Hampton Roads and compel in two hours the Merrimac, the best war-ship of the confederates, to withdraw disabled, after having sunk the United States frigates Cumberland and Congress. April 19, 1864, the Kearsarge can follow the Alabama upon the high seas, and on the 19th of April, 1864, off Cherbourg, France, destroy this proud piratical craft. Here was effected a change in naval warfare. Iron-clad monitors, the needle-gun, and the heavy ordnance have changed almost them ode of warfare; and were we to go into a war to-day we would have none of the muskets which did such effective service in the days of the rebellion. Nor could we go into the market and supply ourselves with the arms so necessary to defend our national honor. They must be manufactured to order, and who will make them if the Government does not require them?

A board of officers, after experimenting for six months with a view of ascertaining the best small-arms to be placed in the hands of our soldiers, have made their report. I quote from the report of the board for selecting a breech-system for the muskets and carbines of the military service. The board consisted of the following officers: Alfred H. Terry, brigadier-general; P. V. Hagner, colonel of ordnance; H. B. Clitz, colonel Tenth Infantry; M. A. Reno, major Seventh Cavalry; L. L. Livingstone, captain Third Artillery.

Final test with .45 caliber arms—Conclusion—Selection—Recommendation of Springfield system.

These arms having been received, with the exception of the fourth on the list, for which the Remingtons supplied a substantially similar arm of their own make, No. 86, they were tested for rapidity of firing by the expert, and also by a party of old soldiers and recruits. Without particularizing the special favorable and unfavorable features of each system, fully shown by other portions of the record, the board has been brought to the conclusion from their own experiment, as well as from the great mass of confirmatory testimony obtained from the army in the field, that the Springfield gun, No. 99, of all those presented, is the best suited for our military service. They have, therefore,

Resolved, That the board recommend that the Springfield breech-loading system be adopted for the military service of the United States in accordance with the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1873, and for other purposes," approved June 6, 1872.

And now the Committee on Appropriations recommend an appropriation of $100,000, from which we can make about fifty-five hundred and fifty-six of these arms. Colonel Benét says that the cost of one of these Springfield breech-loaders would be from sixteen to eighteen dollars. At this rate it would take eighteen years to make enough guns for one hundred thousand men, taking it for granted that none would wear out or become unserviceable in the mean time. If it is true that this is the best small-arm now in use we would cut a sorry figure if we should become involved in war, and we would be unable to equip ten thousand men with this arm. We have capacity to manufacture thirty-five thousand of the Springfield breech-loading guns per annum, at a cost of about $500,000.

It seems to me that to proceed no faster in the manufacture of this gun would be criminal and unjustifiable upon any score of wholesome and judicious economy. And the policy of such saving economy would not be apparent in time of war. We would then rush into every market to buy guns, and we would be compelled to supply our soldiers with inferior arms at superior and exorbitant prices. With our present capacity it would take us three years to manufacture one hundred thousand of them. Is there anybody who can believe that we ought not to manufacture them at our national armories forthwith, and gather several hundred thousand of them in our arsenals? I would do this without increasing our capacity to produce; but I would do it because nobody can horoscope the future and tell what may happen to us as a nation, or what complications may encompass us within the next few years.

Now what is true with regard to the improvements of small-arms is equally true with regard to the improvements which have been made in heavy ordnance. Our sea-coasts, fortifications, and harbors need new armaments to enable them to withstand the assaults that may be brought against them by the new and improved heavy guns and projectiles. The age in which we are living is prolific in the wonderful progress that society is making. Our young nation is the giant figure that is rising up among the powers of the earth and asserting its rightful authority. The most progressive, active, and enlightened, as well as Heaven-favored people are we on earth, and yet we are so poverty-stricken to-day that we cannot put our country in proper defense, or even supply the means of defense, in case of a sudden and great emergency. If this is true the spectacle is appalling.

Our cavalry and infantry regiments are mostly in the Territories and Indian country, and upon the border or frontier. They are performing a hard and thankless duty. There are more troops in Texas than in any other State or Territory; but who can justly say that this force is not needed? How these troops are used and for what they are used let General Sherman say:

> They are distributed under the direction of the department commander, General Augur, as experienced and trustworthy an officer as can be found in any country, and they scout forward and in the intervals of their camps. That line of posts protects the frontier against nomadic Indians and against the incursions of Mexicans who come over the Rio Grande to steal cattle and horses. The southeastern part of Texas is a valuable country. In due time it will fill up with a good population; and although this process is very slow, it is bound to come. But so long as the country is in its present condition I do not see how you can help covering and protecting that frontier, and that cannot be done cheaper than it is now done by the present cavalry. Take away the Ninth Cavalry and the settlements of Texas would fall still farther back, and other troops would have to be raised a second time to recover the country thus surrendered or lost.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> The necessity of a regiment in Utah has been demonstrated, I think, to the satisfaction of all thinking men. There is a natural antagonism between the Mormons and their neighbors. There is a United States court there, which is constantly calling upon the commanding officer for assistance in the way of serving its writs and in enforcing its mandates. I have no doubt that the presence of that regiment there has kept the peace, where otherwise we might have been dishonored by riots, murders, and collisions, that would have been disgraceful to our civilization. The troops are, of course, perfectly neutral as between the conflicting parties, and generally stand between them, now protecting one and then the other. To show the power of our Government, I would venture to say that any person in Utah can be arrested and surrendered to the civil courts with a sergeant and three men; but it could not be done unless those garrisons were there, and unless the people understood distinctly that where three men went three hundred could go, and more, if necessary. * * * * *
>
> There have been excitements in the city of New Orleans, when those men were compelled to stand to arms in the streets for days at a time. I mean during the election excitements growing out of the governorships and senatorships. Thus far I claim that the troops there have behaved with admirable discretion. They have never shot a man, but I have no doubt that they have prevented many riots. The regiment has prevented riots there, and that prevention, I think, has been of great importance to the country at large and to our reputation as a civilized people, for every riot in a city like New Orleans is a disgrace to the whole American people.

No class of educated men in our country are doing such hard and severe duty as are the line officers of the Army for as little pay. Mr. Chairman, let me call your attention to the sacrifices our officers and men have been subjected to.

General Sherman says:

The Sixteenth Infantry is one of the few regiments that are in the South. Its headquarters are at Nashville, Tennessee, with detachments at Lebanon, Kentucky; Jackson, Mississippi; Little Rock, Arkansas; Humboldt, Tennessee; Lancaster and Frankfort, Kentucky. The regiment has been there, with changed localities, substantially since the close of the war. It has been shifted about, the companies occupying various positions according to the requirements of marshals and revenue agents.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. Is it not desirable to shift these men once in a while?

General SHERMAN. We ought to shift them as a whole, but we cannot afford it. I have tried it three or four times, but every time we attempt to change a regiment, in the spirit of fairness, we meet with opposition from the Quartermaster-General, saying that he has not the necessary money.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut. The men ought to be shifted to a more rigorous climate.

General SHERMAN. Of course it ought to be done in the interest of humanity; not with that regiment so much, because its location is generally healthy, but with another regiment that has been in Louisiana for the same length of time. I mean the Nineteenth Regiment. * * * The Nineteenth Infantry is the one that I spoke of just now as having been in the extreme South so long. It has gone through the yellow fever three times.

* * * * * * *

The Twenty-second Infantry is on the Missouri River. We are trying to get the Sioux into that district west of the Missouri River, and therefore that part of the country is guarded pretty strongly. There are two regiments there. The one commanded by General Stanley, the Twenty-second, occupies Fort Sully, Fort Randall, and the lower Brule agency, all in Dakota Territory. That regiment has been there ever since the close of the war. Some of its officers have hardly seen a white face, except their own garrison, for six or seven years. The regiment has been there seven years, and I have promised them myself several times to bring them out where they can have a school-house and church, but I have not been able to fulfill my promise thus far.

General Townsend says:

We have to give officers a little leave of absence sometimes, in order to save their health. There are a great many invalid officers now, broken down by long service in malarious countries. If we had the means of transportation to change regiments more frequently we could save life and health by transferring from unhealthy to healthy localities.

The CHAIRMAN. Have not most of the regiments, in point of fact, been transferred within the last five years?

Adjutant-General TOWNSEND. No, sir. For instance, the First Infantry has been stationed on the lakes for about eight years, while other regiments have been in the South for the same length of time.

Secretary Belknap says:

Right here let me make one remark, which may have some bearing upon the question. There are some regiments which the War Department would like very much to change the location of; not because it is absolutely necessary, but because those regiments have been a long time in a certain section of the country, and have endured the rigors of a bad climate, while other regiments have been in sections of the country more favorable to them. I would like, and so would the General of the Army, to exchange those troops, and yet it is impossible to do so on account of the immense expense. The transfer of the Third Cavalry from Arizona to the Department of the Platte, and of the Fifth Cavalry from the Department of the Platte to Arizona, (although the horses were not brought,) cost over $200,000. The regiments exchanged horses, but the troops and baggage were moved, and that cost over $200,000. There are regiments in Dakota which have been there several years, enduring the rigors of that climate, and it would be very agreeable to their officers and men to be moved to a more southern station; while it would be equally agreeable to one of the regiments in Texas to take a northern station for a time; and yet it is impossible to make these movements on account of the expense. * *

I would like to go back a little as to the question relative to the troops in Arizona. Among the services rendered by the troops in that Territory was the building of a telegraph line, six hundred miles long, at less than the amount of the appropriation which was made for it. There was a large saving by using troops for that work, instead of civilians. There was an appropriation for that purpose, and the line is now in working order.

General Ord says:

The improvement in the men's quarters, as I remarked, is confined to a few stations; at many in this department the quarters are old, originally built of logs, or are mere shells of mountain pine, without proper lining or ceiling; the flooring is worn through, the roofs open and leaky, and nearly all the skeletons of such wooden structures are so decayed, that it is waste of lumber and nails to attempt to repair them; and yet year after year from ten to twenty thousand dollars have been wasted upon such dilapidated old posts as Fort Laramie, (built in 1847,) Camp Douglas, and Fort McPherson. These quarters are all infested with bed-bugs, so that, as an Irish soldier said, "to get any sleep in them, the men in warm weather have to lie out of doors." But the plains are dry and dusty and high winds prevail; cleanliness, therefore, in such shells in summer, or warmth in winter, is impossible. Such discomfort, of course, adds to the number of desertions. Now that the Indians are being permanently located, good permanent quarters should be built for the troops, to be located with reference to the Indian reservations; the very large annual expenditure for repairing old huts or shells would thereby be avoided.

Can and should the Army be reduced? If so, how? This appropriation bill strikes a blow in the dark. It withholds the bread and clothing and pay for the present force of enlisted men, but it does not determine upon whom or what branch of the Army its decimating and blighting touch shall fall. It strikes the most "unkindest cut of all." Pass this appropriation bill without fully considering the question as to whether there should be a reduction of the Army, and you compel a reduction, without regard to consequences. Would it not have been better to have determined the other question first, and then make your appropriations accordingly; because if a reduction of the Army can be made, it would be well to find out in what arm of the service the reduction should take place, because of the difference of expense. The relative expenses of the different arms of the service are as follows:

Army expenses.

Service.	Expenditures by each of the several staff departments.					Total cost of each regiment.
	Quartermaster's.	Subsistence.	Medical.	Pay.	Ordnance.
Cavalry.....	$473,500 00	$81,845 90	$6,399 36	$243,992 00	$36,468 60	$842,203 26
Artillery	187,000 00	61,028 00	4,944 96	217,560 00	19,719 50	490,252 46
Infantry.....	180,270 00	48,581 50	3,878 40	158,120 00	6,292 00	397,141 90
Total	840,770 00	191,453 40	15,222 72	619,672 00	62,479 50
Aggregate cost of the three regiments						1,729,597 62

Now let us see, from such light as the Committee on Military Affairs have been able to gather, whether it would be proper, right, just, and expedient to force a reduction of the Army by the passage of this appropriation bill in the present form.

General Sherman says:

As a matter of self-interest, as well as of opinion probably, (that of a soldier in contradistinction to that of a citizen,) I do not think that this force should be reduced in number, either as a nucleus on which to build a future military establishment, or as a force to meet the exigencies of the present state of our country. If, therefore, the necessity for economy is so urgent, I advise that the pruning-knife be applied to what I would call those branches of the military peace establishment outside of the active regiments. Whether such a pruning knife can be applied with wisdom or not I cannot say, but my judgment is that the present ten regiments of cavalry, five regiments of artillery, and twenty-five regiments of infantry cannot be reduced in numbers or efficiency consistent with the good of this country. * * * * * * *

If reduction is forced upon the Army by the financial condition of the country, (of which Congress must be the sole judge,) I unhesitatingly say that you had better cut off at the head than at the foot; that the most valuable part of our military establishment is in the inverse order of its general arrangement. I look upon two cavalry regiments, or even infantry regiments, as worth more than the whole general staff, myself included. I would rather see Congress abolish me and my office, and turn me loose to get my own living and tear out the first thirty-eight pages of the Army Register, than to see it disband two such regiments. * * *

Now, I have accounted for every one of our ten regiments of cavalry. I do not believe that you can dispense with a single soldier in these ten regiments, nor do I believe than you can do much in the way of economizing in their maintenance; and yet they are as necessary as troops were on the line of operations in any of our Army movements during the civil war.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you recollect how many regiments of cavalry we had on the frontier before the war?

General SHERMAN. I think five; but at that time we did not have near as much frontier to protect. The line then was neither so far north, so far west, nor so far south. Now, instead of having a single western frontier, we have got a western frontier, and an eastern frontier, looking east from California and Oregon, and two or three little circles in Montana, Colorado, and New Mexico, each having a frontier of its own, so that we have multiplied the extent twenty-five or thirty times.

Adjutant-General Townsend says:

I think that the true economy of the country at large would be better subserved by maintaining the Army as it is, at any rate for the present. Besides the posts that are garrisoned and the duties that are done, as described by General Sherman, the Secretary of War has very frequent applications for escorts to Indian commissioners; to persons conveying bullion for the Treasury from one end of the continent to the other; for surveys sometimes connected with the military service, and sometimes with boundary commissions, like the British and American boundary commission at present. If the Army did not furnish both the men and transportation for such purposes as those, they would have to be provided for from civil life, and at a much greater expense. As to the size of the companies, they are now as small as it is safe to reduce them. * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. Are you prepared to say that all the soldiers and officers of the Army are busily engaged all the time?

Adjutant-General TOWNSEND. I would not like to say that, because that would be taxing human nature too much.

The CHAIRMAN. I mean within all reasonable time.

Adjutant-General TOWNSEND. I think so. I have looked carefully over the Army, and I cannot see how we can spare any men.

Secretary Belknap says:

In my opinion, it would not be advisable to reduce the Army at the present time, The Army now consists of ten regiments of cavalry, five of artillery, and twenty-five of infantry, two regiments of the cavalry and two of the infantry being colored. They are distributed at the various posts throughout the country in as limited numbers as the great number of posts and the small number of troops in the service compel them to be. * * * I am one of those men who believe that in time of peace we should prepare for war. I was very fearful not many months ago that the result might show that in our fortifications we were not prepared for trouble which might come.

Secretary Delano testifies as follows:

Mr. GUNCKEL. And, in your opinion, the force there is necessary at this time?

Secretary DELANO. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you say that any more force than you have there is necessary?

Secretary DELANO. Not if I am correctly informed as to the force which is there. The exact condition of the several military stations, and the forces at them, I am not as able to give as an officer in the Army would be.

The CHAIRMAN. From reports received from the agents of your Department, do you feel any apprehensions from a lack of military force?

Secretary DELANO. No, sir; not at present.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you any recent information from that region of such a nature as would lead you to believe that hostility or mischief to the settlers or danger to the Indians is imminent?

Secretary DELANO. At the present moment, and always at this season of the year, Indians are in repose; everything is quiet. It is not the season of the year for their movements. I shall feel some apprehension next spring, when the Indians begin to move, especially if there is any lack of ability in the Indian Department to comply with the treaty stipulations in feeding them.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. Then the feeding and supplying of the Indians ought to be, in a measure, accompanied with a force to compel obedience if they violate the treaty stipulations?

Secretary DELANO. That I consider necessary until the wild tribes are all compelled to accept reservations and to begin to adopt the habits of civilization.

* * * * * * *

Mr. GUNCKEL. You think the military should be in as strong force there as they are now?

Secretary DELANO. I think so. I do not think there can be any diminution of the force there with safety to the best interests of the country, largely and fully considered.

* * * * * * *

Mr. ALBRIGHT. Would not the withdrawal or weakening of military force have a tendency to impair the present peace policy, and in view of a possible war with either the Sioux or Comanche Indians, increase the expenses of the Government?

Secretary DELANO. My want of positive and detailed knowledge as to the present strength of the Army and as to its availability for the necessary co-operation in the management of the Indians must make my answer hypothetical. I therefore say that a withdrawal of the present military force used for the purpose of preventing Indian depredations or punishing Indians for outrages which they have committed, or the weakening of such force to the extent of creating a feeling among the Indians that the Government is unable to punish them, would have a strong tendency to endanger our present peaceable relations with the Indians, and to bring on conflicts which might lead to serious war with some of the powerful tribes.

General Sheridan, in his report, says:

To give protection to the citizens of the frontier against these Indians and to guard the long line of our Mexican border against robberies by Mexican citizens and Indians living in Mexico; to explore unknown territory and furnish escorts to surveying parties for scientific purposes and for projected railroads; to assist and guard the railways already built and other commercial lines of travel; to aid in the enforcement of the civil law in remote places; and to do generally all that is constantly required of our Army in the way of helping and urging forward everything which tends to develop and increase civilization upon the border, and at the same time to protect the Indians in the rights and immunities guaranteed them under existing treaties, has been the work of the troops in this military division for the past year, and that work has been successfully accomplished. * * *

In the Department of Texas there has been a great deal of trouble along the northern line of the State, and also along the line of the Rio Grande. The troubles on the northern frontier of Texas have been principally from Indians coming from the reservations in the Indian Territory; and I respectfully request that some definite authority be given me to punish these raiding parties of Indians upon their return to their reservations. I believe it is the only way in which the evil can be cured. * * * * * * *

The necessity of keeping Indians on their reservations is becoming more apparent every day, with the westward growth of the settlements and the rapid progress and development of the mining and cattle-grazing interests in the State of Nebraska and the Territories of Wyoming and Colorado. During the last twelve months, depredations by roving bands of Indians, who, as a general thing, come from some one of the various Indian reservations within the limits of this command, have been exasperatingly frequent. They have attacked our posts, killed and wounded our citizens and carried off their cattle, and, when pursued by our troops, taken refuge within the lines of their reservations and coolly boasted of their atrocities. It seems to me that a rigid rule should be made, forbidding their absence from their reservations, and in case they disregarded it, authority should be given the military to follow on the reservation, search out, capture, and punish all whom it can be shown have been absent from their agencies and off the reservations.

General Ord says:

I have again to call attention to the exposed condition of Nebraska, north of the Union Pacific Railroad, and extending from the Missouri River for three hundred miles westward, in which there is not a single military station. This country is as rich as any other portion of Nebraska, but the fear of Indians has retarded its settlement. It has been subject to frequent raids from the Sioux, from Spotted Tail's, and now from Red Cloud's reservation. When, on a recent visit East of the first-named chief, he did me the honor to call, with his lieutenants and concubines, at my office, I called his attention to a raid which some of what were considered to be his people had just committed on the peaceful Baptist and Danish settlers on the Loup. He replied in quite a haughty manner that he had not come here to be talked to in that way. As I had no power to control his movements, or make him or the people whom he claimed to rule respect the property of the white settlers, the touching upon facts put an end to further conversation.

The testimony of Generals Sheridan, Pope, and McDowell is very strong and emphatic, that it would be extremely dangerous to make any reduction of the army in any parts of their commands. Inspector-Generals Davis, Baird, and Hardie give like evidence.

Would it not be dangerous, in the face of this testimony, to strike down and reduce the Army? Is there no other place where expenses can be lopped off? Does the country owe nothing more to the officers of the forty regiments than to turn some of them adrift without provision for the future? I have already referred to the character of the officers in the line. I repeat that there is no class of men subjected to greater inconveniences and hardships. They are compelled to live in remote parts of the country, deprived of the society of the refined and cultured, often away from their friends and families for years, with barely sufficient to keep them. Instances are numerous where officers, although entitled to a month's leave every year, have been unable to avail themselves of it, because the distance from home was too great, and the expense of travel too high; so they were compelled to remain at their post from absolute necessity, although during their prolonged and enforced absence relatives and friends have sickened and died. What other calling so exacting and inexorable in its demands.

These men make no money out of their professions, and they are not the men who have wasted and squandered the patrimony of the nation. They are not the men who have connived with Tammany thieves and robbed cities, or become concerned in Credit Mobiliers, and enriched themselves at the expense of the nation; they are not the men who bought stocks and speculated in gold and Government bonds and crippled the credit of the nation, and unhinged the prosperity of our agricultural, commercial, manufacturing, and mining interests. No, sir. They have been loyal and true to their obligations and responsibilities, and have even been interdicted from personally or by letter making known their grievances to a Senator or a member of Congress unless first solicited and invited to do so. The chances for such invitations were not many. To no other class of citizens is the right of petition denied so summarily. Notwithstanding this they have received their small pay and have done faithful duty wherever sent, whether on the arid, barren, and burning sand-wastes of Arizona, or in the cold and howling regions of the Rocky Mountains, standing sentinel by turn over the Indian and the frontiersman, or guarding the great transcontinental thoroughfare, or protecting and escorting scientific exploring parties; in other instances guarding railroad engineer parties and railroad construction parties, or sent away up in the fog-banks of Alaska taking care of the fisherman, fur-trader, and Indian. Neither affection, danger, nor climate would restrain them from the performance of their duties. They have performed all uncomplainingly; but now, where extravagance in other quarters makes retrenchment and economy necessary, these faithful public sentinels and officers are the first to feel the unfriendly grip of the Government, and are to be turned out into the cold. It may not be popular, but I cannot help it. I must, Mr. Chairman, raise my voice against this policy and protest against it. Nothing could be more ungracious or ungenerous. These men are trained and educated soldiers. The Government has asked them to make the profession of arms their life-calling, and many of them are not in a condition to enter any other and make a living for themselves or families.

Mr. WHEELER. There is not a line in this bill in respect to officers.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. We will see how it operates. It proposes to pay men who do no service. That is the operation of this economic system. I object to making these faithful officers and men the scapegoats for the sins of other men. I know it is argued that many of the officers will be retained; but that makes it not any easier to those who will have to be mustered out and discharged. It is the uncertain blow that you inflict which makes it so painful; no one knows on whom it will light. If there are inefficient officers in the Army, who are useless, and hanging to it for a living simply, like barnacles to the bottom of a ship, let the Secretary of War and the General of the Army weed them out. Secretary Belknap says if you shrink the regiments there is no necessity for all the officers. If our finances are so straitened that we cannot keep up the skeleton of an army any more—for that is all we have now—I would suggest that there are other places where we can retrench and save money. Stop building new custom-houses, court-houses, and post-offices. Discontinue work upon the public buildings in Washington City. If you reduce the Army, and cut down the naval appropriations, you need no new Navy and War Department buildings. The old buildings that answered the demands of the great war ought to be sufficient when there is peace, and nobody to fight but the poor Indian. There is not a city in the country but can get along with the old Government buildings better than the country can do without the Army. Let retrenchment be earnest and deep, and I have no doubt money enough can be economized to save the Army. It may be that there are leaks in the War Department, places where more money is paid than should be. If there be, strike at those points. It seems to me that there is too much money paid for officers' quarters, offices, &c., in the large cities. Reduce and economize wherever practicable and consistent with the safety and dignity of the country.

I have already referred to the fact that many of the enlisted men are performing duties of great importance to the country, which if performed by civilians would cost the Government many thousand dollars more than the same service does now. Let me show the House and country how, and the number of men that are employed upon special service:

Ordnance Department	434
West Point	214
Signal detachments	450
Hospitals stewards	391
Ordnance sergeants	111
Commissary sergeants	152
In different Bureaus of the War Department, &c	482
Extra-duty men in Commissary Department	299
Quartermaster's Department:
Artificers, overseers, clerks, signal sergeants	1,947
Laborers, teamsters, &c	2,178
Engineer battalion	339
Total	6,987

Then, there are four hundred and thirty enlisted men trained and instructed in the Signal Service Department, and give the world "Old Probabilities" daily. Is the country willing to dispense with their services? It costs the Army $417,680.50 per annum; but where it is provided for in the appropriation bill I do not see. Now, if the Army is not to do this work, to what other branch of the Government is the transfer to be made, and will the Government save money thereby? This item goes into the expense account of the Army, although the Army proper cares very little about the prognostications of the weather. No other department of the Government could render the service so cheaply and well. From the signal service you learn where the "wind listeth," and can tell "whence it cometh and whither it goeth."

General Townsend says:

General Sherman alluded to the table at the last part of the recapitulation: "Permanent and recruiting parties, music-boys, and recruits not available for assignment;" "general-service men on duty in the Bureaus of the War Department, Army division and department headquarters;" "Ordnance Department;" "West Point detachments;" "signal detachment;" "hospital stewards;" "ordnance sergeants;" "commissary sergeants." All of these come out of the thirty thousand men allowed to the Army. For instance, to carry on the duties of the signal service all over this continent, the Secretary of War allows one hundred and twenty-five sergeants. These sergeants are not additions to the organization of the Army, but the muster-rolls are examined periodically, and the number of vacancies which actually exist in the grade of sergeant in the various companies is averaged. Thus, without taking any sergeants from the companies, the signal service gets the advantage of a man enlisted especially for his adaptation to that duty, and this man has the pay and grade of a sergeant in the regular organization of the Army. While the companies thus lose nothing the signal service makes use of those sergeants. The detachment of signal-service men is, at the present time, rather larger than is authorized by the Secretary of War; but this is an accidental occurrence. The signal-officer keeps at Fort Whipple, on the other side of the Potomac River, a detachment of men under instruction as soldiers, and makes them do duty as soldiers. It is a regular military post. He selects from these men the most intelligent and skillful, and appoints them to the rank of sergeants. That detachment will be diminished to the number which the Secretary of War allows, and which is the strength allowed to a company of infantry, and no more.

With reference to these clerks who are on general service: The great demand upon the War Department for information to pass pension claims, bounty claims, and a thousand other things, every one hurrying to have it done as soon as possible because the claimants are suffering for the money, demanded an increase of the clerical force. We took, then, some men who had served in the volunteer and Regular Army, and who were skillful penmen, and enlisted them especially for clerks. They came out of the strength of the companies, like the First Infantry on the Niagara frontier, or some of the companies of artillery which do not require to be full in order to be effective just at this time. In the event of the service of those regiments being actually required in the field, we should have to break up the clerical system at once in order to give the companies their effective force.

There is another source of labor in the Adjutant-General's Office which cannot be avoided just now. This will be corrected soon. The frequent handling of the muster-rolls in order to get information for the Pension Bureau and other Bureaus, has worn them out so that there was great danger of the information contained in them being lost entirely. To remedy that I have had books made with blank rolls printed on them, and a great many of these clerks are employed in copying the muster-rolls into these books. That will be a permanent form which can be easily used, and the old rolls will be kept in case of any question of accuracy.

Surgeon-General Barnes says:

The number of enlisted men employed on extra duty is as follows: 165 hospital stewards on duty as clerks in the Medical Department, mainly engaged in the record and pension division of this office in examining the books of closed general hospitals and other records, to ascertain the cause of death or discharge from service and hospital history of soldiers who died or were disabled during the rebellion, in order that evidence may be furnished in answer to the inquiries made by the Commissioner of Pensions, Adjutant-General, and Paymaster-General, by members of Congress, and others; 9 hospital stewards on duty as clerks in Lieutenant-Colonel Baxter's office, compiling medical statistics of the late Provost-Marshal-General's Bureau; 2 hospital stewards on duty as clerks at the United States Army Dispensary; 1 hospital steward on duty as clerk at the Freedmen's Hospital; 24 privates, general service, United States Army, on duty as messengers, and 6 privates on duty as watchmen, in the Medical Department; 3 privates on duty as messengers at United States Army Dispensary; and 1 private on duty as messenger in Lieutenant-Colonel Baxter's office. Their total monthly pay for December, 1873, was $21,550.89.

The hospital stewards, ordnance sergeants, and commissary sergeants all render valuable service to the Government at a rate much cheaper than the same work could be done by civilians. There is such a thing as being penny-wise and pound-foolish. The war has entailed a vast work on the War Department. The representatives of dead and living soldiers are furnished with essential evidence from this Department, by which they are enabled to obtain pensions, back pay and bounty; and in many instances the Government is protected against dishonest claims. This work must be done, or the people would be dissatisfied. See what it is. It costs a great deal of money to do all this, and yet this expenditure has really nothing to do with keeping up the existing Army.

All the clerks employed in the different Bureaus of the War Department are not engaged upon matters which pertain to the maintenance and running of the Army at this time. They work largely upon things of the past, but pertaining to the interests of the living. All the money that is passed out on this account is paid as though it was for the Army proper. This is wrong, as any one can understand. The forty regiments that now constitute our Army have many of the bronzed and weather-beaten officers of the late war in them; men who were brave, gallant, heroic, and self-sacrificing; men who followed the flag wherever it was borne, in disaster or victory; who defended it upon the field of battle amid the rain of bullets and fearful destruction of artillery. These regimental banners bear the names of the battles in which they participated. Their history is made up in their commands. Drive them away from the commands and you drive them into banishment with sad and heavy hearts, and verify to them the proverb that republics are ungrateful. Scarcely one of the forty colonels but was a major-general of the volunteers of the Army, and has seen twenty-five years of service; and many of the lieutenant-colonels held ranks equally high. Yet when the war ended these men gracefully surrendered their high positions which their merit had won for them, and took subordinate positions and reduced pay, because they loved their profession and country, and because their country had educated them to this profession, and because there was no other door open to them on account of their previous training and isolation.

I pray you, gentlemen, stay your hands before you agree to reduce the little Army that we have and send these men adrift. The country needs their services. Let them die in the harness. Many of them will soon pass away, alas! perhaps too soon for the good of the country. Let these men go down to their graves feeling that their country is grateful. It is not good policy to educate men for the Army—invite them, ay compel them, to take positions and send them away from the refining influences of society and from all contact with business—and after they have formed habits that unfit them for other pursuits, then turn them out from the Army and say to them "We need you no longer; you must pick up some other calling." Such a policy will destroy the esprit de corps of the Army. As well shut up West Point and send the young men home who are being educated to the profession of the Army, and stop the annual expense of $220,000 until there shall not be a surplus number of officers. Save this money until you need officers and then open the halls again of the honored institution. The Departments, it is said, are too full of officers, and so are the regiments. Why, then, educate more? Why this waste? What use is there in educating so many young men if you cannot employ them? My honorable friend from New York [Mr. WHEELER] says, however, we will stop recruiting and hold on to the officers and pay them, although we have nothing for them to do. Not much economy in that. Pay men salaries and have nothing to do for them? It will require wonderful optics to see the ecomony in that.

Mr. WHEELER. The Committee on Appropriations have nothing whatever to do with the organization of the Army. The gentleman belongs to the Committee on Military Affairs, and if he wants to turn any of these officers out of service he and his committee have the jurisdiction and the power, and let them do it. The Committee on Appropriations have nothing to do with it.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I have already said that the effect of this Army appropriation bill will be to compel a reduction of the Army, or have officers in the Army with nothing to do. That is the plain and palpable effect of the bill, as must be apparent upon examination.

If the premises of the Appropriation Committee are correct, then there is no virtue in a policy that proposes to pay and retain a lot of men for whom you have no work. These men are to be paid as a charity. They will not thank this Congress for such a humiliation. If the ideas of economy are correct that seem to inspire the committee on this subject, then you rob economy of all merit by such a subterfuge. If there is no need for the men, then you do not want the officers. You cannot use officers where there are no men to be commanded. If the object is to pension these officers, let them understand it, and the principle upon which it is proposed to do it.

We can weaken our Army to such an extent as to invite Indian attacks and other disturbances. The best way to do this is to weaken forts and withdraw troops, and Indian hostilities will soon be inaugurated in earnest.

Commissioner Smith says:

Mr. ALBRIGHT. In your opinion, is the presence of troops necessary in Texas as well to protect the frontier as to keep the Indians in subjection?

Mr. SMITH. A military force is not necessary to keep those Indians in subjection on reservations. We have but little trouble with them as long as they stay there; but when they leave the reservations the troops are needed to chase them; or, if that is not effective to prevent raiding, on account of the large extent of territory, then the troops would be needed to come on reservations and to punish the Indians there. But it would be much better policy, as it would save cruelty, if the force was large enough to strike the Indians when they are off the reservations, and in that way punish the guilty ones only; for if you attack them on the reservations you necessarily attack women and children also, and a very large proportion of Indians who are not at all guilty, except as they harbor guilty ones. Take the Comanches, for instance. I suppose that not one in twenty-five of the fighting men of the Comanches is disposed to go off the reservations marauding, but the twenty-fifth part of them are, and they go off and get their booty, and steal and murder, slip through the military, and come back on the reservations, and it is impossible for the agents or the military to detect them and punish them alone if the attempt is made there. The Indians should be struck in the act or on the way to or from the reservations.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. Is the military force sufficiently large to do that?

Mr. SMITH. No, sir; I do not think it is. I have asked that that be done, and the reply has been that, from the nature of the country and the great extent of the reservation, it is impossible to keep the Indians from slipping in and out. But if the military force was on the border, instead of being in the interior of the reservation, I think it would be much more serviceable in accomplishing that end.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. In the regions of country where the Indians are peaceably disposed, is or is not a military force necessary to protect the Indians from the encroachment of white settlers and frontiersmen?

Mr. SMITH. Frequently that is the case, and there has been more need of troops in that line, except in the wildest portion of the country, than in the other line. There is more force needed to protect the Indians from persons who intrude on the reservations, and to keep them off, than there is to keep the Indians themselves in subjection. That is likely to increase. The fact of the Indians coming into some sort of civilization increases that liability.

One Indian war costs much more in one year than probably five years of the present peace policy. It is said the little Modoc war cost $6,000,000 and one hundred lives, most of which might have been saved if there had been a little more military force around the lava-beds in attempting to carry out the policy of the Indian commissioners.

For a country like ours, containing upward of forty million people, and a domain as broad, extensive, and magnificent as ours is, an army of thirty thousand men is not too great. We may have profound peace to-day, but no one can tell how soon war-clouds may rise and create necessity for additional troops. The mutations among nations are so great, that not much can be counted upon for the future with regard to any policy. "In time of peace prepare for war" is the safest maxim that any nation can adopt and incorporate into its policy.

Taking our population at 40,000,000 with 30,000 troops would give us one soldier to 1,333 of the population. We now have 37 States and 9 Territories. In 1860 the population was 31,443,321; the Army 12,931: giving one soldier to 2,447 of the population. In 1860 there were 34 States and 7 Territories. In 1850 the population was 23,037,262; the Army 10,321: giving one soldier to 2,236 of population. Then we had 31 States and 4 Territories. In 1840 the population was 17,069,453; the Army was 12,539: giving one soldier to 1,363, with 26 States and 3 Territories. In 1830 the population was 12,866,020; the Army 6,184; giving one soldier to 2,080 of population, with 24 States and 3 Territories. In 1820 the population was 9,633,822; the Army was 9,980, giving one soldier to 965 of population, with 24 States and 2 Territories. Take the average of these decades and it gives one soldier to 1,732 of population, near what it is now.

At no former period in our history did we have the same extent of territory to watch and guard over. Never before did we have to deal with all the Indian tribes at one and the same time. And hence there never was the same necessity for so many troops for this purpose. Never before did we have so large a border to take care of or such a long line of sea-coast to defend. A reduction of our Army on account of poverty will be an invitation to provoke war. A proper national pride should induce us to keep up an army large enough to maintain domestic peace and order. Save the Army, and provide for feeding and equipping it, and the country in this matter will say "Well done."

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to occupy a few minutes of the time of the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of submitting two or three reflections on the question of expenditures. I am unwilling that the Committee on Appropriations shall be put in the attitude of being the antagonist of all worthy and generous appropriations that may be asked for by the executive officers of the Government. This is not the spirit of the committee, it is not the spirit of any member of the committee. We have been appointed to the places we hold, and have been charged by this House with the special duty to look into the necessities of the Government, and to make its appropriations as economical as they can be made without manifest and serious injury to the public service.

If there is any one sentiment among the best men of this nation which is more nearly universal than another it is the sentiment that a careful, fearless, and thorough-going retrenchment of expenditure is necessary, and that it is the imperative duty of Congress to make it. As the organ of the House, specially charged with this duty, the Committee on Appropriations have addressed themselves to that work. We were told, early in the session, that a deficit of nearly $42,000,000 must be provided for to meet current and anticipated expenditures. It was clear that this could be done in one or all of three ways—by taxing, by borrowing, or by reducing expenses. I have hoped and I believe that the deficit has been overestimated; but whatever be its amount, it is the first duty of the hour for us to ascertain how nearly it may be overcome by retrenchment. If the deficit is as large as the sum named, I do not believe we shall be able to cover it by retrenchment alone. The Committee on Appropriations believe that just two things can be done, and ought to be done, in the matter of reducing expenses. First, if there be any appropriations that can be wholly dispensed with, if there be any extravagances that can be lopped off altogether, dispense with them; lop them off. Second, if there be any expenditures that can wholly or in part be postponed for a year or two, until the pinch is over and the revenues recover their strength, postpone them, and thus aid in tiding us over the difficulties of the present situation.

The Committee on Appropriations propose to go thus far and no farther in the way of retrenchment. They do not propose in any case to cut into the vital life of the Government, or to cripple its necessary functions. I cannot quite agree with my friend from Massachusetts, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, [Mr. DAWES,] that if there be $42,000,000 of deficit we can retrench the whole of that amount. I do not think we can. For one I am unwilling that we should do anything that cuts into the vital life, that impairs the real necessary machinery for carrying on the Government. Better borrow, better tax than to cripple and disorganize the really necessary functions of the Government. But I do believe it is possible in the two ways I have named to cut down the expenditures very nearly if not quite $25,000,000.

In the Navy bill, which has already passed, in the Army bill, now under debate, and in the fortification bill, already reported to the House, the Committee on Appropriations have made reductions to the amount of about ten millions below the estimates; and, if we can have the support of the House in carrying out the measures already matured and in preparation, I believe we may make the reduction amount in the aggregate to the sum I have named. The action of the House to-day has greatly discouraged me in the hope that this will be done; and the speech to which we have just listened has added to my discouragement. It has led me to fear that, in the view of many gentlemen on this floor, all reductions of expenditure are good and worthy and desirable, except any particular one proposed. I fear we shall find ourselves in this condition, that every reduction not before the House is popular; and every reduction that is going to come up by and by, or that might be proposed, is wise and desirable.

The gentleman who just sat down [Mr. ALBRIGHT] says, in substance, "Put the knife in anywhere else, but do not touch these worthy men of the Army who sustain the honor of the country in the field." "Put your knife," says he, "into the public buildings; they are overgrown." Sir, I have looked at the yeas and nays upon the vote taken an hour ago, and I am sorry to find that my friend who has just made this recommendation voted against putting it in the power of the House to come to an early decision in favor of reducing these very expenses on the public buildings. I find that when that question was up for consideration his anxiety to cut down expenditures on the public buildings was not so great as it is now—is after that subject has been safely shelved and practically put beyond the reach of the House for weeks to come. [Laughter.] And now we come to the Army appropriations, where it was supposed something could be done in the way of reduction, and where the committee recommend a reduction of three or four millions, and we find that this of all places is just the place where the gentleman says we must not cut down expenses.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if this is to be the spirit of our legislation, it will be idle and absurd for any committee, or for the House, to hope to make any efficient reduction of expenses.

We had before us an hour or two ago a measure of transcendent importance to the economy of our legislation. We had before us a measure backed up by such a statement as this from the Secretary of the Treasury:

> Neglecting to give authority for the one building that the Treasury Department did recommend, Congress, at its last session authorized the commencement of seventeen new buildings, and the purchase of sites for several others which were not recommended.

Furthermore, the Secretary of the Treasury goes on to say:

> With the present organization of the Supervising Architect's force it does not seem practicable, in a single year, to commence or properly supervise the construction of all the buildings authorized by Congress.

Thus the Secretary of the Treasury plainly lays the burden on our shoulders. He says that here with us rests the responsibility for the unusual and, as he thinks, extravagant expenditure in regard to public buildings; and he tells us that as to about fifteen of these buildings he has withheld the order, and has not commenced work upon them, so that Congress may take the subject under revision and say whether he shall or shall not go on.

In the early weeks of the session, by an almost unanimous vote, we asked the President to send to all his Secretaries the estimates for revision, and if possible for reduction. In response to this request there came back to us from the Secretary of the Treasury, among other things, three lists of public buildings. One comprised those on which he had not commenced work at all, and in regard to which he was waiting to allow to Congress its second reflection before proceeding with the work. A second list embraced buildings on which but little had been done; and a third naming those that were well advanced towards completion. In his communication accompanying these lists he says:

> Should it be decided to commence work on no new building and to suspend work in all cases where practicable, the estimates for the year ending June 30, 1875, can be reduced from $1,146,000 to $2,739,000—a reduction of nearly $5,500,000, being a reduction of $11,406,000 in the present and the ensuing year taken together.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GARFIELD. I decline to be interrupted just now.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. Will the gentleman permit me to say one word?

Mr. GARFIELD. Not yet; I will yield the floor soon.

Mr. PLATT, of Virginia. I hope the gentleman will see to it that I am accorded the opportunity he promises. I do not want him to make a speech on a subject not before the House, and then allow no opportunity for reply.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not yield.

Now, I say when we have had placed before us the results of the revision of the estimates as asked for by us; when we are told by the Secretary that we can in this and the coming year make a reduction of $11,500,000 by simply saying that the work on new buildings shall not be begun; when this subject is referred to a committee whose business it is to supervise appropriations; and when that committee bring in a bill by the unanimous consent of its members, proposing not to repeal any law authorizing new buildings, but proposing to stop such expenditures as the Secretary of the Treasury said not only can be stopped but ought to be stopped, gentlemen whistle that bill out of the House and put it where, under the rules, it cannot get back for weeks. And now, when the Army bill is before us——

Mr. BECK. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. GARFIELD. Now, when the Army bill is before us, gentlemen say, "Why do you not reduce expenditures on public buildings?"

Mr. BECK. Can I be heard on my question of order?

The CHAIRMAN, (Mr. KELLOGG.) The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. GARFIELD. How is that?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has spoken ten minutes.

Mr. GARFIELD. Are we proceeding under the ten-minute rule? If so, by what order?

Mr. BECK. I claim the floor if I have the right to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] is entitled to the floor if he claims it; but he signified his desire to occupy only ten minutes, and the Chair limited him to that time.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is right. I should not have occupied more time if I had not been interrupted. After occupying only a few minutes further I will yield the floor altogether, though I am entitled to it an hour if I choose to occupy it.

Mr. BECK. I make a question of order on the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the point of order.

Mr. BECK. My point is that the gentleman has no right to criticise the action of members in their votes given this morning, the presumption being that each member voted as he did for reasons satisfactory to himself, and with as much regard to the public interest as is felt by the gentleman from Ohio. He has no right to scold this House.

Mr. GARFIELD. If I have said anything out of order I will submit to the judgment of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Ohio proceeds longer than ten minutes, he must confine his remarks to the Army appropriation bill, which is pending before the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BECK. I object to the gentleman scolding members on this floor; and I wish my point of order decided by the Chair.

Mr. GARFIELD. If this is a question of scolds and scolding I cheerfully submit that to the judgment of any body of members of this House as between the gentleman and myself.

Mr. BECK. So will I; I have raised the point of order, and insist on its being decided by the Chair.

Mr. GARFIELD. If there is a point of order let it be decided. I have transgressed no rule of the House known to me.

Mr. BECK. It is that the gentleman from Ohio is reflecting on the conduct of members this morning.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can proceed with his remarks on the pending bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Chairman, we are discussing, as I said before, the appropriation bill for the support of the Army, which, under the legislation of 1870, was fixed at thirty thousand men, and was recruited up to that number. When was the Army fixed at thirty thousand men? Nearly four years ago, at a time when the Southern States were in a disturbed and unsettled condition; when we had no assurance that peace would reign for the next three years; when the Ku-Klux organization was wide-spread, and life and property were far from safe in the States lately in rebellion, an army sufficient to meet the emergencies of that day was authorized by Congress. Will any man say what was sufficient at that time is not somewhat more than sufficient now? It is too late to insist that we cannot safely reduce our Army, which has proved sufficient for the last four years of turbulence.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALBRIGHT] read a long list of men enlisted in the Ordnance Corps of the Army that he thinks might be cut off, but he did not think we ought to reduce the number of officers. If the gentleman has read the pending bill he will see we do not reduce the roster of the Army by discharges of officers or enlisted men. We simply allow it by the process of natural absorption to be reduced to twenty-five thousand men. That is the measure of reduction to which his objections can apply. I have more than once, in this House, defended the Army against attempts to cut it down by a wholesale mustering out of its officers and men, and I would do so now. But the committee asks the House to make reductions in the expenditures of the Army which will amount, in the aggregate, to nearly four millions, and this they believe can be done by abandoning some posts in the East and in the interior, and placing the soldiers that now occupy them on duty on the frontier. I have referred to the vote of this morning and to the debate on this bill for the purpose of urging members not to fall into the habit of praising all measures of retrenchment that are afar off but rejecting those immediately before us.

I have no doubt that the House believes in economy as a principle; I hope we may not fail to make it an accomplished fact. Every bill which the committee brings in is likely to be met with this same class of argument: strike somewhere else, but do not strike here. I hope that will not be the spirit prevailing in this House in regard to the reduction of expenditures. We can make a reduction that will satisfy the reasonable demand of the country, only by making thorough work on each item of expenditures as it comes up for consideration.

Mr. BECK. Mr. Chairman, I only ask a few minutes, not over five or ten; and the only object I have in rising is this: I object to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, or any gentleman, assuming on this floor that gentlemen voting for the reference of any bill to any committee are actuated by improper motives or a desire to prevent retrenchment. I am one of those who voted to refer the bill this morning to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and I did it because I believed the subject properly belonged to that committee; that that committee had the time to give it investigation necessary to its careful understanding, and the Committee on Appropriations did not have the time. I remember the movement proposed by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. COBURN,] to divide up the work of the Committee on Appropriations, at the beginning of the session, upon the ground they had not time even to make the necessary appropriations. I resisted it because I wished all proper appropriations to remain with that committee. I tell the House now if the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations or his committee undertake to absorb all the duties which belong to the other committees of the House, they will find themselves not only in a meager minority as they were to-day, but they will find the House will divide them up, and will take from them the subjects over which other committees have jurisdiction. I assume the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds is as honest, as economical, as well able to look into all these subjects, as the Committee on Appropriations. I was upon that committee for two years, and I know that it is impossible for the members to do the work that they are required to do without devoting all their time and all their talents to keep down appropriations. And I know that in the Army bill, although attention was called to it when the naval bill was before the committee, they have made provision here—

> For pay of the Army, and for allowances to officers of the Army for transportation of themselves and their baggage when traveling on duty without troops, escorts, or supplies, and for compensation of witnesses while on court-martial service; for traveling expenses of paymasters' clerks; for payment of postage on letters and packages, and cost of telegrams received and sent by officers of the Army on public business, $11,450,000.

If they have the time to do their work well, why did they not make appropriations for the pay of the Army? Why did they not make appropriations for mileage? Why did they not make appropriations for transportation? Why not for postage? Why not tell us the amount, so that we will know when we are appropriating those vast sums what they are? Why lump them up together in one sum of eleven and a half millions? It is because that committee have not had the time, and have not been able to devote the labor to give the House the information necessary to enable us to vote intelligently on this question. And yet they want to absorb all matters relating to public buildings and grounds, and to wipe out, if I may use the expression, the other committees of the House, as I could show had I the time and opportunity to do it. They lump together in one section $11,450,000 for pay of the Army, transportation, mileage, &c.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I rise to a question of order. It is that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] has no right as a member of this House to get up here and, pretending to make a speech on the appropriation bill, to scold one of the committees of this House. [Laughter.]

Mr. BECK. I stand corrected. [Laughter.] I will not scold any more. Fortunately, I was through before the objection was made; but the bad example was set on the other side, and that is the only excuse I have to make.

Now, I wish the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to know that to-morrow, or whenever the opportunity shall offer, I shall move, at the end of the paragraph I have read, the following proviso:

> Provided, That only actual traveling expenses shall be allowed to any person whatever in the service of the United States; and all allowances for mileages or transportation in excess of the amount actually paid are hereby declared illegal; and no credit shall be allowed to any of the disbursing officers of the United States for payment or allowances in violation of this provision.

And I shall ask them to tell us how much of this amount is expended now.

Mr. WHEELER. Will the gentleman allow me to say, on behalf of the Committee on Appropriations, that we will accept his proviso most cordially.

Mr. BECK. I am most glad to hear it.

Mr. WHEELER. Or anything else in that direction.

Mr. BECK. And I will ask the gentleman this further question. I have before me a statement made in this House on the 17th of February, 1871, by Mr. LOGAN, of Illinois, then a member of this House. And in connection with the statement I wish to ask why it is that the pay of the Army was increased over a million and a half three years ago, and whether it is proper to maintain that increase to-day. I quote the following figures from Mr. Logan's speech:

PAY OF GENERALS AS AT PRESENT.

1 General	$19,278
1 Lieutenant-General	15,803
5 major-generals, at $9,472	47,360
16 brigadier-generals, at $6,105	96,240
Total	$178 681

I wish to ask the committee whether they cannot bring down the pay of these generals to something less than four times the pay of a member of the Senate of the United States or a member of this House; and whether there are not other retrenchments that can be made, as well in the reduction of the Army and in the reduction of pay, as in the reduction of mileage and transportation, when men are paid ten cents a mile, traveling with free tickets in their pockets, and the whole thing is lumped together to prevent the House knowing how it is.

Those things I intend to ask when the proper time comes. And I want the gentleman from Ohio, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and his colleagues to know that I will go as far in the direction of reduction of expenditure and retrenchment as they will, and further. And I desire to have sent to the committees to which they properly belong these subjects, until the gentlemen of the Committee on Appropriations can find time to give details in regard to the bills they lay before us, which will enable us to act intelligently, and so that we shall neither have to scold nor be scolded while considering the measures laid before us.

[Mr. COBURN addressed the Committee. Before he had concluded the Committee rose. His speech in full will be found on pages 1011, 1012, 1013, and 1014.]

Mr. WHEELER. If the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBURN] prefers to finish his remarks to-morrow, I will move that the committee rise.

Mr. COBURN. I would prefer that arrangement.

Mr. WHEELER. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair,

Mr. KELLOGG reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the special order, being the bill (H. R. No. 1009) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

INDEPENDENCE HALL.

Mr. O'NEILL. I present the preamble and resolution of the Carpenters' Company of Philadelphia, inviting the members of the House of Representatives to assemble in the hall of the company on the 5th day of September, 1874, that being the one hundredth anniversary of the meeting in said hall of the first American Congress. I ask that they be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, respectfully represent, that while we recognize the fact that our nation's freedom was declared in Independence Hall, yet the place where were heard the deliberate tones of a Hancock, the defiant voice of a Henry, and the persuasive eloquence of an Adams, in the first American Congress, than whom a body of greater men never assembled together or crowned a nation's annals, and who bowed here in reverence, as the first prayer was uttered in that Congress, deliberately avowing that to the oppressive acts of the mother country Americans never can submit, and the determination to part with their liberties only with their lives, so patriotically and faithfully adhered to, is held sacred by us as the nation's birthplace, and must be dear to every patriotic heart; and whereas the near approach of the one hundredth anniversary of that memorable event renders it befitting that we, the successors of those who freely offered this hall when even our time-honored state-house was closed against them, should commemorate the nation's advent by our official action: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That Congress be invited to assemble in this hall on the 5th day of Ninthmonth, 1874, the one hundredth anniversary of the meeting of the first American Congress, and that such ceremonies take place as they in their wisdom shall deem best suited to that memorable occasion.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

SAMUEL RAIN, President.
WALTER ALLISON,
D. HENRY FLICKWIR,
RICHARD K. BETTS,
Committee.

Extract from the minutes of the Carpenters' Company, of the city and county of Philadelphia, Tenthmonth 20, 1873.

Attest:

W. T. FORSYTH, Secretary.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move that the invitation just read be printed, and referred to the Committee on the Centennial Celebration and the Proposed National Census of 1875.

The motion was agreed to.

LEGAL-TENDER NOTES.

Mr. COX, by unanimous consent, presented a substitute, which he designs offering to the bill (H. R. No. 1328) to fix the amount of legal-tender notes at $400,000,000; and the same was ordered to be printed.

INFLATION OF THE CURRENCY.

Mr. POTTER, by unanimous consent, presented a memorial of banks, bankers, merchants, and others, of the city of New York, against any further inflation of the currency; which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

COMMISSIONERS OF CLAIMS.

Mr. LAWRENCE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on War Claims, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1565) relating to the commissioners of claims, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, recommitted to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES BYERS ET AL.

Mr. DUELL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1566) for the relief of James Byers, George W. Griggs, and John Nolan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

DENNIS M. STUART.

Mr. DUELL also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1567) granting a pension to Dennis M. Stuart; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

FORFEITURE OF RAILROAD GRANTS.

Mr. HURLBUT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1568) to resume possession, title, and control, on the part of the United States, of all lands heretofore granted to railroads where the conditions of said grants may have been broken; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

CAPTAIN FRANK BURNETT.

Mr. BUCKNER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1569) for the relief of Captain Frank Burnett, of Louisiana, Missouri; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

FRANK A. LUDA.

Mr. BUCKNER also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1570) for the relief of Frank A. Luda, of Louisiana, Missouri; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MADISON FEMALE ACADEMY.

Mr. DURHAM, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 1571) for the benefit of the Madison Female Academy, located at Richmond, Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. PENDLETON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. No. 89) in relation to the lines of telegraph connecting the Capitol with the various Departments of the Government; and

A bill (H. R. No. 1221) to confirm certain land titles in the State of Missouri.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. MCKEE for ten days.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. STORM for the remainder of the week.

RECESS.

Mr. POLAND. I move that the House now take a recess until half-past seven o'clock this evening.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The House will meet this evening for the consideration of the statutes at large.

The House then (at four o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.) took a recess until half-past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at half-past seven o'clock p. m., Mr. G. F. HOAR in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

REVISION OF THE STATUTES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House meets this evening to resume the consideration of the bill reported from the Committee on Revision of the Laws of the United States. It is entitled "A bill (H. R. No. 1215) to revise and consolidate the statutes of the United States in force on the 1st day of December, A. D. 1873." The Clerk will resume the reading of the bill.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. Before the Clerk resumes the reading of the bill, I desire to turn back to section 56, where there is an omission to which the attention of the committee has been called. They desire to insert after line 4 the words, "one officer, charged with disbursing the contingent fund and other expenses of the House of Representatives, at an annual allowance of $576," so that it will read:

SEC. 56. The following persons are employed in the service of the House of Representatives:

One Clerk of the House, at a salary of $5,000 a year.

One officer, charged with disbursing the contingent fund and other expenses of the House of Representatives, at an annual allowance of $576.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. The next amendment is on page 33, section 165, to insert after the word "Departments" the words "and in the General Land Office," so it will read:

SEC. 165. From the 1st day of October until the 1st day of April, in each year, all the Bureaus and offices in the Departments and in the General Land Office shall be open for the transaction of the public business at least eight hours each day; and from the 1st day of April until the 1st day of October in each year, at least ten hours in each day; except Sundays and days declared public holidays by law.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I would ask if that is not included in the word "offices?"

Mr. POLAND. I can explain to the gentleman from Wisconsin that when this provision was made the General Land Office was a distinct office. It has since been attached to the Interior Department.

Mr. ELDREDGE. If it is an office I think it is covered by the word "offices."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. Passing on to the point where we stopped at the last evening session, the next amendment is in section 251.

The section was as follows:

SEC. 251. The Secretary of the Treasury shall, from time to time, digest and prepare plans for the improvement and management of the revenue, and for the support of the public credit; shall superintend the collection of the revenue; shall, from time to time, prescribe the forms of keeping and rendering all public accounts and making returns; shall grant, under the limitations herein established, or to be hereafter provided, all warrants for moneys to be issued from the Treasury in pursuance of appropriations by law; shall make report and give information to either branch of the Legislature in writing respecting all matters referred to him by the Senate or House of Representatives, or which shall appertain to his office; and generally shall perform all such services relative to the finances as he shall be directed to perform.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I move to amend, by inserting after the word "Legislature," in line 10, the words, "in person or;" and after the word "writing" the words "as may be required." This amendment will be found in the errata.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. E. R. HOAR] will reduce his amendment to writing. The rules provide that when required by the Chair all propositions shall be submitted in writing; and upon this bill it is exceedingly important for the Clerk that the amendments should be submitted in proper form. Hence the Chair will enforce this rule in all cases.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. The next amendment I desire to propose is in section 316.

The section was as follows:

SEC. 316. It shall be the duty of the Register—

First. To keep all accounts of the receipts and expenditures of the public money, and of all debts due to or from the United States.

Second. To receive from the Comptroller the accounts which shall have been finally adjusted, and preserve such accounts, with their vouchers and certificates.

Third. To record all warrants for the receipt or payment of moneys at the Treasury, and certify the same thereon, except those drawn by the Postmaster-General, and those drawn by the Secretary of the Treasury upon the requisitions of the Secretaries of the War and Navy Departments.

Fourth. To transmit to the Secretary of the Treasury copies of the certificates of balances of accounts adjusted.

Fifth. To furnish to the proper accounting officers copies of all warrants cover-settlement of accounts in their respective offices.

ing proceeds of Government property, where the same may be necessary in the

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I move to amend the section by inserting in the third clause, before the word "Comptroller," the word "first;" and after the word "Comptroller" the words "and Commissioner of Customs."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. The next amendments I desire to submit are in section 354.

The section was as follows;

SEC. 354. The subordinate officers, clerks, and employés of the Department of Justice, and their respective salaries, shall be as follows:

One chief clerk, at a salary of $2,200 a year; one law clerk, acting as examiner of titles, at a salary of $3,000 a year; one stenographic clerk, at a salary of $2,000 a year; one clerk, at a salary of $2,000 a year; seven clerks of class four, one of whom may be appointed disbursing clerk; two clerks of class three, one clerk of class two, two clerks of class one, one messenger, two assistant messengers, two laborers, two watchmen.

In the office of the Solicitor of the Treasury:

One chief clerk, at a salary of $2,000 a year; four clerks of class four, three clerks of class three, three clerks of class two, two clerks of class one, one messenger, one laborer.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I move to strike out the first clause of this section, commencing "the subordinate officers" and ending "as follows," and inserting in lieu thereof, "There shall be in the Department of Justice."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I move further to amend by striking out this clause:

Seven clerks of class four, one of whom may be appointed disbursing clerk.

And inserting in lieu thereof the words "one disbursing clerk."

Mr. ELDREDGE. Is this amendment intended to change the number of clerks now provided for by law?

Mr. E. R. HOAR. No, sir; it is an amendment similar to those we had under consideration at the last evening session. There is a general provision as to the number of these clerks, and there is a general section already passed providing that the disbursing clerk shall be a clerk of class four, who may receive $200 additional compensation for this service. This amendment simply follows out the system already applied by the House to the other Departments, so far as reached.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Does not striking out "seven" change the number of clerks?

Mr. E. R. HOAR. As has been stated, I should suppose twenty or thirty times, the law makes no provision for the number, leaving that to be fixed by the annual appropriation bills; section 172 provides for exactly that contingency.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I suppose the number of times the matter has been stated has not changed the number of clerks. [Laughter.]

Mr. E. R. HOAR. No, sir; it is not affected by that at all.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I move further to amend the same section by striking out lines 16 to 22, as follows:

Two clerks of class three, one clerk of class two, two clerks of class one, one messenger, two assistant messengers, two laborers, two watchmen.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I move further to amend this section by striking out lines 25 to 30, as follows:

Four clerks of class four, three clerks of class three, three clerks of class two, two clerks of class one, one messenger, one laborer.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. The next section to which I desire to offer amendments is section 396.

The section was as follows:

SEC. 396. The subordinate officers, clerks, and employés of the Post-Office Department, and their respective salaries, shall be as follows:

One chief clerk, at a salary of $2,200 a year; one superintendent of the Post-Office building and disbursing clerk, at a salary of $2,300 a year; one topographer, at a salary of $2,500 a year; one stenographer, at a salary of $1,800 a year; fourteen clerks of class four, sixty-three clerks of class three, fifty clerks of class two, sixty-nine clerks of class one, fifty-seven female clerks, at a salary of $900 a year each; one messenger to the Postmaster-General, at a salary of $900 a year; four assistant messengers, at a salary of $720 a year each; one captain of the watch, at a salary of $1,000 a year; nine watchmen, at a salary of $720 a year each; twenty-five laborers, at a salary of $720 a year each; one engineer, at a salary of $1,600 a year; one assistant engineer, at a salary of $1,000 a year; one carpenter, at a salary of $1,252 a year; one assistant carpenter, at a salary of $1,000 a year; one fireman and blacksmith, at a salary of $900 a year; two firemen, at a salary of $720 a year each; three female laborers, at a salary of $480 a year each; such a number of temporary clerks, female clerks, folders, watchmen, and laborers as may be required.

In the office of the money-order system:

One superintendent, at a salary of $4,000 a year; one chief clerk, at a salary of $2,000 a year.

In the office of foreign mails:

One superintendent, at a salary of $4,000 a year; one chief clerk, at a salary of $2,000 a year.

In the dead-letter office:

One chief of division, at a salary of $2,500 a year.

In the office of mail depredations:

One chief of division, at a salary of $2,500 a year.

In the office of the blank agency:

One superintendent, at a salary of $1,800 a year; one assistant superintendent, at a salary of $1,600 a year; four assistants, at a salary of $1,200 a year each.

In the office of each of the Assistant Postmasters-General:

One chief clerk, at a salary of $2,000 a year; one messenger.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I move to strike out the first clause of this paragraph, beginning "the subordinate officers" and ending "as follows," and inserting in lieu thereof the words, "There shall be in the Post-Office Department."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I move further to amend by striking out lines 13 to 18, as follows:

Fourteen clerks of class four, sixty-three clerks of class three, fifty clerks of class two, sixty-nine clerks of class one, fifty-seven female clerks, at a salary of $900 a year each.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I move further to amend by striking out lines 21 and 22, as follows:

Four assistant messengers, at a salary of $720 a year each.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I move also to amend by striking out lines 25 to 28, as follows:

Nine watchmen, at a salary of $720 a year each; twenty-five laborers, at a salary of $720 a year each.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I move further to amend, by striking out lines 43 and 44, as follows:

Such a number of temporary clerks, female clerks, folders, watchmen, and laborers as may be required.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I move to strike out line 68, being the words "one messenger."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. The next section which the committee propose to amend is section 419.

The section was as follows:

SEC. 419. The subordinate officers, clerks, and employés of the Department of the Navy, and their respective salaries, shall be as follows:

One chief clerk, at a salary of $2,500 a year, so long as there is no Assistant Secretary of the Navy, and at a salary of $2,200 a year when there is an Assistant Secretary of the Navy; one disbursing clerk, at a salary of $2,000 a year; one superintendent of the Navy Department building, at a salary of $2,050 a year; four clerks of class four, four clerks of class three, two clerks of class two, three clerks of class one, two messengers, four laborers, five watchmen.

In the Bureau of Yards and Docks:

One civil engineer, at a salary of $3,000 a year; one chief clerk, at a salary of $1,800 a year; one draughtsman, at a salary of $1,800 a year; one clerk of class four, two clerks of class three, one clerk of class two, one clerk of class one, one messenger, one laborer.

In the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting:

One chief clerk, at a salary of $1,800 a year; one clerk of class four, one clerk of class three, two clerks of class two, two clerks of class one, one messenger, one laborer.

In the Bureau of Construction and Repair:

One chief clerk, at a salary of $1,800 a year; one draughtsman, at a salary of $1,800 a year; one clerk of class four, two clerks of class three, two clerks of class two, one messenger, one laborer.

In the Bureau of Steam Engineering:

One chief clerk, at a salary of $1,800 a year; one draughtsman, at a salary of $1,800 a year; one assistant draughtsman, at a salary of $1,200 a year; one clerk of class two, one messenger, one laborer.

In the Bureau of Navigation:

One chief clerk, at a salary of $1,800 a year; one clerk of class three, one clerk of class two, one messenger, one laborer.

In the Bureau of Ordnance:

One chief clerk, at a salary of $1,800 a year; one draughtsman, at a salary of $1,800 a year; one clerk of class three, two clerks of class two, one messenger, one laborer.

In the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing:

One chief clerk, at a salary of $1,800 a year; one clerk of class four, two clerks of class three, two clerks of class two, three clerks of class one, one messenger, one laborer.

In the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery:

One clerk of class four, one clerk of class three, one messenger, one laborer.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I move to strike out the first clause of this section and insert, "There shall be in the Department of the Navy."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I move further to amend by striking out in lines 8 and 9, after the words "one disbursing clerk," the words "at a salary of $2,000 a year."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I move on page 96, under the heading of the "Department of the Navy," to strike out lines 12 to 18 inclusive, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Four clerks of class four, four clerks of class three, two clerks of class two, three clerks of class one, two messengers, four laborers, five watchmen.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I move on the same page, under the heading of "Bureau of Yards and Docks," to strike out lines 25 to 30 inclusive, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

One clerk of class four, two clerks of class three, one clerk of class two, one clerk of class one, one messenger, one laborer.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I move on the same page, under the heading of the "Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting," to strike out lines 34 to 39 inclusive, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

One clerk of class four, one clerk of class three, two clerks of class two, two clerks of class one, one messenger, one laborer.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I move on the same page, under the heading of the "Bureau of Construction and Repair," to strike out lines 45 to 49, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

One clerk of class four, two clerks of class three, two clerks of class two, one messenger, one laborer.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I move on page 97, under the heading of the "Bureau of Steam Engineering," to strike out lines 57 to 59 inclusive, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

One clerk of class two, one messenger, one laborer.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I move on the same page, under the heading of the "Bureau of Navigation," to strike out lines 63 to 66 inclusive, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

One clerk of class three, one clerk of class two, one messenger, one laborer.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I move on the same page, under the heading of the "Bureau of Ordnance," to strike out lines 72 to 75 inclusive, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

One clerk of class three, two clerks of class two, one messenger, one laborer.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I move on the same page, under the heading of the "Bureau of Provisions and Clothing," to strike out lines 79 to 84 inclusive, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

One clerk of class four, two clerks of class three, two clerks of class two, three clerks of class one, one messenger, one laborer.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I move on the same page, under the heading of the "Bureau of Medicine and Surgery," to strike out lines 86 to 89 inclusive, as follows:

One clerk of class four, one clerk of class three, one messenger, one laborer.

And insert in lieu thereof:

One chief clerk, at a salary of $1,800 a year.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I move on page 101, under the heading of the "Department of the Interior," in section 443, to strike out lines 1, 2, and 3, as follows:

The subordinate officers, clerks, and employés of the Department of the Interior, and their respective salaries, shall be as follows.

And insert:

There shall be in the Department of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I move on the same page, under same heading, to strike out lines 6 to 16 inclusive, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Four clerks of class four, to any or all of whom may be paid $200 a year additional, if the Secretary deem it necessary and proper; six clerks of class four, one of whom may be designated by the Secretary to act as superintendent of the building, and who shall be entitled to $200 a year additional therefor, additional to three disbursing clerks; six clerks of class three, six clerks of class two, six clerks of class one; three copyists, at $900 a year each.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I move to insert this further amendment:

The Secretary may, if he deem it necessary and proper, pay $200 a year additional to any four clerks of the fourth class.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Is that an amendment proposed to the existing law, or is it a provision in the law now?

Mr. E. R. HOAR. It is a provision of the law now. It is, as the gentleman from Wisconsin will notice, substantially contained in the part struck out. It is only rewriting the matter more accurately.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I move on the same page, under the same heading, to strike out lines 19 and 20, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Two assistant messengers, six laborers.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I move on the same page, under the heading of the "General Land Office," to strike out lines 32 to 35, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Three clerks of class four, twenty-four clerks of class three, forty-four clerks of class two, seventy-five clerks of class one.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I move on page 102, under the same heading, to strike out lines 40 and 41, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Two messengers, three assistant messengers.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I move to strike out line 44, page 102, as follows:

Nine laborers.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I move under the heading "In the office of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs" to strike out lines 47 to 55 inclusive, page 102, as follows:

Five clerks of class four, eight clerks of class three, twelve clerks of class two, nine clerks of class one, four copyists, at $900 a year each; one messenger, one assistant messenger, one laborer, one watchman.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I move, under the heading "Office of the Commissioner of Pensions," to strike out lines 58 to 66 inclusive, on the same page, as follows:

Twenty-two clerks of class four, fifty-two clerks of class three, eighty-four clerks of class two, one hundred and twenty-six clerks of class one, twenty-five copyists at $900 a year each; one messenger, twelve assistant messengers, six laborers, four watchmen.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I move, under the heading "In the Patent Office," to strike out, on page 103, lines 85 to 90 inclusive, and lines 105 and 106, as follows:

Seven clerks of class four, eight clerks of class three, thirty-one clerks of class two, forty-five clerks of class one, thirty clerks, at a salary of $1,000 a year each; forty clerks, at a salary of $900 a year each; thirty laborers; six laborers, at a salary of $600 a year each.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I move, under the heading "In the Office of Education," to strike out lines 114 to 116, inclusive, page 103, as follows:

One clerk of class two, four copyists at $900 a year each; one messenger.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. The next amendment is on page 104, and needs perhaps a statement to the House. It is to strike out, on page 104, lines 5 and 6, as follows:

Third. Public buildings which are under the charge of the Chief of Engineers.

This occurs in the chapter defining the duties of the Secretary of the Interior; and the propriety of the amendment results from a series of legislation, which, in the judgment of the committee, clearly produces this effect:

When the office of the commissioner of public buildings was created, the duties of that officer were defined, and it was provided that he should report to, and be under the supervision of, the President of the United States. When the Department of the Interior was created, it was provided that this officer, the commissioner of public buildings, should report to, and be under the supervision of, the Interior Department. He was transferred to that Department. In 1867 Congress abolished the office of commissioner of public buildings, and provided that his duties should be performed by an officer of the Army, the Chief of Engineers. There was nothing said in that statute about to whom he should report, or who should have the supervision over him, except what might be inferred from the mere fact of transferring the duties to an officer of the Army. By a subsequent statute of the same year, 1867, it was provided that all past appropriations were to be expended under the War Department—all past appropriations for the objects in charge of the commissioner of public buildings. It was afterwards provided that the Washington Aqueduct, and all public works, should be under his supervision, and that the money appropriated for them should be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Those who prepared this volume, not finding an express repeal of the statute which placed the commissioner of public buildings under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, and not giving the effect to it which the committee had given, have distributed the duties of the officers of the Chief of Engineers in regard to public buildings, public works, and the Washington Aqueduct, between the two Departments. But for six years—since 1867—all the direction of these works and buildings has been under the charge of the Chief of Engineers, who has reported to the War Department, and the War Department has drawn from the Treasury all the appropriations, and superintended their disbursement.

It has, therefore, been for six years the practical construction of all branches of the Government, including the Interior, the Treasury, and the War Departments, that this was transferred entirely to the Department of War, and such is the committee's understanding of the law.

This will involve some other amendments at a subsequent part of the statutes, and I make an explanation here that it may be understood when we shall come to them. The amendment is to strike out the words which I have read, in lines 5 and 6, at the top of page 104.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. The next amendment proposed is in section 525 of page 119. I offer the following amendment:

Strike out the first three lines of section 525, as follows:
The subordinate officers, clerks, and employés of the Department of Agriculture, and their respective salaries, shall be as follows:

And insert in lieu thereof:
There shall be in the Department of Agriculture.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. The next amendment is in the same section, 525, to strike out lines 27 to 34, inclusive, as follows:

Four clerks of class four, five clerks of class three, six clerks of class two, seven clerks of class one, three copyists, at a salary of $900 a year each; one messenger, at a salary of $850 a year; two assistant messengers.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. The next amendment is to strike out lines 43 and 44 of the same section, page 120, as follows:

Nine laborers, three watchmen.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I think an amendment should be made in section 470, page 108, where in line 3 the word "county" occurs; a misprint, I suppose, for "country." The section, as printed, is as follows:

SEC. 470. The Secretary of the Interior shall adopt such rules as may be necessary to prohibit the sale of arms or ammunition within any district or county occupied by uncivilized or hostile Indians, and shall enforce the same.

I move to amend by striking out the word "county" and inserting the word "country."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. The amendments which have now been adopted, Mr. Speaker, include all the amendments proposed by the committee as far as page 121 at the end of title 12, and as far as the work in this part of it has been under my charge.

Mr. POLAND. I have an amendment to offer in section 551, on page 125.

The section was as follows:

SEC. 551. The State of Texas is divided into two districts, which shall be called the eastern and western districts of Texas. The eastern district includes the counties of Newton, Jasper, Jefferson, Orange, Tyler, Polk, Liberty, Galveston, Harris, Montgomery, Austin, Fort Bend, Brazoria, Colorado, Wharton, Matagorda, Lavaca, Jackson, Calhoun, DeWitt, Victoria, Goliad, Refugio, San Patricio, Nueces, Cameron, Starr, Webb, and Hidalgo, as they existed February 21, 1857. The western district includes the residue of said State.

Mr. POLAND. I offer the following amendment:

In lines 7 and 8 strike out "February 21, 1857," and insert "in 1852."

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. On page 126, head-note 555, strike out the words "North Carolina," so that it will read:

Judges in Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi, South Carolina, and Tennessee.

Mr. ROBBINS. I hope "North Carolina" will not be stricken out.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Would not that dissolve the Union?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The head-note is no part of the bill, and the Clerk will make any alterations necessary.

Mr. POLAND. On page 132, in head-note 593, (I make this motion to the Clerk,) I move to strike out the word "judge" and insert "clerk," so that it will read:

Preparatory examinations and orders in admiralty cases, by district clerk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That correction will be made.

Mr. POLAND. I move in section 575, on page 102, after the word "following," to insert "but when any of said dates shall fall on Sunday, the term shall commence on the following day;" so that it will read:

The regular terms of the district courts shall be held at the times and places following, but when any of said dates shall fall on Sunday, the term shall commence on the following day.

I will state that there are various terms of the courts set for some fixed day in the month.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. I move now to strike out lines 154 and 155 of the same section, as follows:

When the said date falls upon a Sunday, the term shall commence on the following day.

Those words are rendered unnecessary by what has just been inserted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. I move to amend on page 136, in line 165, by inserting after the word "and" the words "Tuesday after;" so that the section will read:

In the western district of Virginia, at Danville, on the Tuesday after the fourth Monday in February and August; at Lynchburgh, on the Tuesday after the third Monday in March and September; at Abingdon, on the Tuesday after the fourth Monday in May and October; and at Harrisonburgh, on the Tuesday after the first Monday in May and Tuesday after the second Monday in October.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. I have an amendment to offer on page 143, section 611, which I will reduce to writing.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Would it not be in order to move to recommit the bill, so that the committee may have an opportunity to prepare their amendments? I supposed the object of dispensing with the reading was to facilitate action on the bill, but it does not help us if we have to wait here until amendments can be written out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin has not the floor for that purpose.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I will take it pretty soon for that purpose.

Mr. POLAND. I move to amend the section I have indicated by inserting in line 1, after the word "established," the words "as follows: one;" in line 2, after the word "Alabama," the words "one for;" in the same line, after the word "Arkansas," the words "one for;" and in line 3, after the word "and," the word "one;" so that it will read:

Circuit courts are established as follows: one for the three districts of Alabama; one for the eastern district of Arkansas; one for the southern district of Mississippi; and one for each district in the States not herein named; and shall be called the circuit courts for the districts for which they are established.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. On page 147, section 632, I move in line 7, to strike out the word "should" and insert the word "shall;" so that the section will read:

The circuit courts shall have original jurisdiction as follows:
First. Of all suits of a civil nature, at common law or in equity, where the matter in dispute, exclusive of costs, exceeds the sum or value of five hundred dollars and an alien is a party, or the suit is between a citizen of the State where it is brought and a citizen of another State: Provided, That no circuit court shall have cognizance of any suit to recover the contents of any promissory note or other chose in action in favor of an assignee, unless a suit might have been prosecuted in such court to recover the said contents if no assignment had been made, except in cases of foreign bills of exchange.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. On page 150, in section 638, line 6, I move to strike out the words "married women;" so that it will read:

SEC. 638. No judgment, decree, or order of a district court shall be reviewed by a circuit court, on writ of error or appeal, unless the writ of error is sued out, or the appeal is taken, within one year after the entry of such judgment, decree, or order: Provided, That where a party entitled to prosecute a writ of error or to take an appeal is an infant, or non compos mentis, or imprisoned, such writ of error may be prosecuted, or such appeal may be taken, within one year after the entry of the judgment, decree, or order, exclusive of the term of such disability.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. On page 151, line 34, after the word "therefor," strike out "or;" so that the paragraph will read:

In order to such removal, the petitioner in the cases aforesaid must, at the time of filing his petition therefor, offer in said State court good and sufficient surety for his entering in such circuit court, on the first day of its session, copies of said process against him, and of all pleadings, depositions, testimony, and other proceedings in the cause, or, in said cases where a citizen of the State in which the suit is brought is a defendant, copies of all process, pleadings, depositions, testimony, and other proceedings in the cause concerning or affecting the petitioner, and also for his there appearing and entering special bail in the cause, if special bail was originally requisite therein. It shall thereupon be the duty of the State court to accept the surety and to proceed no further in the cause against the petitioner, and any bail that may have been originally taken shall be discharged.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. On page 155, section 649, line 13, I move to strike out the word "and" at the beginning of the line, so that it will read:

When a suit is removed for trial from a State court to a circuit court, as provided in paragraph 1, of section 642, and in such of the foregoing sections as relate to the removal of causes for the purpose of protecting all persons in the United States in their civil rights, and to furnish the means of their vindication, any attachment of the goods or estate of the defendant by the original process shall hold the same to answer the final judgment, in the same manner as by the laws of such State they would have been held to answer final judgment had it been rendered by the court in which the suit was commenced. In the other cases mentioned in the foregoing sections, besides the previous provisions of this section, any injunction granted before the removal of the cause against the defendant applying for its removal shall continue in force until modified or dissolved by the United States court into which the cause is removed; and any bond of indemnity or other obligation, given by the plaintiff upon the issuing or granting of any attachment, writ of injunction, or other restraining process, against the defendant petitioning for the removal of the cause, shall also continue in full force, and may be prosecuted by the defendant and made available for his indemnity in case the attachment, injunction, or other restraining process be set aside or dissolved, or judgment be rendered in his favor, in the same manner and with the same effect as if such attachment, injunction, or other restraining process had been granted, and such bond had been originally filed or given, in such State court.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. On page 156, section 655, line 7, I move to strike out the words "upon the request of either party or of their counsel;" so that it will read:

When a final judgment or decree is entered in any civil suit or proceeding before any circuit court held by a circuit justice and a circuit judge or a district judge, or by a circuit judge and a district judge, in the trial or hearing whereof any question has occurred upon which the opinions of the judges were opposed, the point upon which they so disagreed shall, during the same term, be stated under the direction of the judges, and certified, under the seal of the court, to the Supreme Court at their next session, and such certificate shall be entered of record.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. On page 157, lines 8 and 9, I move to strike out the words "under the seal of the court to the Supreme Court at their next session;" so that the section will read:

SEC. 655. When a final judgment or decree is entered in any civil suit or proceeding before any circuit court, held by a circuit justice and a circuit judge or a district judge, or by a circuit judge and a district judge, in the trial or hearing whereof any question has occurred upon which the opinions of the judges were opposed, the point upon which they so disagreed shall, during the same term, or of their counsel, be stated under the direction of the judges and certified, and such certificate shall be entered of record.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. On page 158 I offer the same amendment that I offered at the beginning of the last chapter. Insert at the end of line 2 of the first paragraph of section 661 as follows:

But when any of said dates shall fall on Sunday, the term shall commence on the following day.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. I move further to amend by striking out the words "at Milledgeville," in line 20, on page 159; so that it will read:

In the southern district of Georgia, at Savannah, on the second Monday in April and on the Tuesday after the first Monday in November.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. I move also to strike out, in regard to the districts of Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, and Rhode Island, the words "when the said days fall upon Sunday the session shall commence on the next day." Those words are now rendered unnecessary by the amendment adopted at the beginning of the chapter.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. I move to amend, in line 144, by inserting the words "Tuesday after the" before the words "second Monday in October," so that it will read, "Tuesday after the second Monday in October."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. I move to amend section 676, in relation to the Supreme Court of the United States, by striking out the word "a" and inserting the word "the" before "Chief Justice," and inserting after the words "Chief Justice" the words "of the United States;" so that it will read:

SEC. 676. The Supreme Court of the United States shall consist of the Chief Justice of the United States and eight associate justices, any six of whom shall constitute a quorum.

This does not seem to be a very important amendment, but some time ago there was considerable discussion in relation to the precise official character of the gentleman holding this office. I have taken pains to make this provision conform to the exact language of the law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. I move to amend section 696, in the fourth and fifth lines, by striking out the words "to the Supreme Court," so that it will read, "wherein the said judges certify as provided by law that their opinions were," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I would inquire of the gentleman from Vermont if it is intended that the words "circuit justice and a circuit judge" shall stand in the beginning of this section. Is that the language intended to be used?

Mr. POLAND. It is.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Is that the law now?

Mr. POLAND. Yes, sir. Inasmuch as we have two circuit judges, a judge of the Supreme Court and a circuit judge proper, we have adopted throughout this revision, for the purpose of designating the two, the term "circuit justice," as applied to the judge of the Supreme Court when sitting in a circuit, and the circuit judge is called "circuit judge." These two titles have been adopted for the purpose of distinguishing between the two.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Is that the language used in the law as it now stands, or is it the language adopted by the Committee on Revision? I do not remember to have seen that term used anywhere in the law.

Mr. POLAND. I do not know that the law has defined a justice of the Supreme Court, when sitting as circuit judge, as "circuit justice." But that term has been adopted throughout this revision. And in a chapter of definitions, which has not been reached, that has been so stated.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I was going to suggest to the gentleman that we have already acted upon many definitions, and I did not know but they included all. I know they did not include this one. I had not seen the expression "circuit justice" used in any statute that I remember.

Mr. POLAND. It is used throughout this revision to distinguish the justice of the Supreme Court from the circuit judge.

Mr. ELDREDGE. It is the language adopted by the committee.

Mr. POLAND. By the reviser.

Mr. LAWRENCE. There is another reason. The justices of the Supreme Court are nowhere by any law called "judges;" they are "justices;" whereas the circuit judges are called in the statutes "judges of the circuit."

Mr. ELDREDGE. They have always been called judges, so far as I know.

Mr. LAWRENCE. It is a misnomer to apply the term "judge" to a justice of the Supreme Court. When a justice of the Supreme Court holds a circuit court he becomes a circuit justice; he is a justice of the Supreme Court holding a circuit court.

Mr. POLAND. Section 608 is as follows:

The words "circuit justice" and "justice of a circuit," when used in this title, shall be understood to designate the justice of the Supreme Court who is allotted to any circuit; but the word "judge," when applied generally to any circuit, shall be understood to include such justice.

I move further to amend, on page 170, in section 705, by striking out the words "and in all cases where the Constitution, or a statute, or treaty of the United States is brought in question;" and also to add to the section the words "and any final judgment or decree of the supreme court of said Territory, in any cause where the Constitution, or a statute, or treaty of the United States is brought in question, may be revised in like manner;" so that the section will read as follows:

The final judgments and decrees of the supreme court of any Territory, except the Territory of Washington, in cases where the value of the matter in dispute, exclusive of costs, to be ascertained by the oath of either party, or of other competent witnesses, exceeds $1,000, may be reviewed and reversed or affirmed in the Supreme Court, upon writ of error or appeal, in the same manner and under the same regulations as the final judgments and decrees of a circuit court. In the Territory of Washington the value of the matter in dispute must exceed $2,000, exclusive of costs; and any final judgment or decree of the supreme court of said Territory, in any cause where the Constitution, or a statute, or treaty of the United States is brought in question, may be reviewed in like manner.

Perhaps there should be a word of explanation in reference to this amendment. There is no provision in any territorial act for cases being taken up to the Supreme Court of the United States from a territorial court on the ground of the question that is involved in it, except in the act relating to the Territory of Washington. The commissioners who made this revision, under the power they had to make the laws uniform, inserted this provision, and made it applicable to all the Territories, noting it, however, as a change. But the Territory of Washington is the only one in relation to which the law contains this provision. The committee propose this amendment so as to make this revision to correspond to the law as it stands.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. I move to amend section 706, by striking out the "s" in the word "appeals," so as to make the section read as follows:

SEC. 706. In all cases where the judgment or decree of any court of a Territory might be reviewed by the Supreme Court on writ of error or appeal, such writ of error or appeal may be taken within the time and in the manner provided by law, notwithstanding such Territory has, after such judgment or decree, been admitted as a State; and the Supreme Court shall direct the mandate to such court as the nature of the writ of error or appeal requires.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. I next desire to move an amendment to section 723.

The section was as follows:

SEC. 723. The writ of injunction shall not be granted by any court of the United States to stay proceedings in any court of a State.

Mr. POLAND. I move to amend by adding to this section the following:

Except in cases where such injunction may be authorized by any law relating to proceedings in bankruptcy.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. The next section to which I wish to move an amendment is section 765.

The section was as follows:

SEC. 765. When a writ of habeas corpus is issued in the case of any prisoner who, being a subject or citizen of a foreign state and domiciled therein, is committed, or confined, or in custody, by or under the authority or law of the United States, or of any of them, or process founded thereon, on account of any act done or omitted under any alleged right, title, authority, protection, or exemption, claimed under the commission or order or sanction of any foreign state, or under color thereof, the validity and effect whereof depend upon the law of nations, notice of the said proceedings, to be prescribed by the court, or justice, or judge, at the time of granting said writ, shall be served on the attorney-general or other officer prosecuting the pleas of said State, and due proof of such service shall be made to the court, or justice, or judge before the hearing.

Mr. POLAND. I move to amend by striking out after the word "law" the words "of the United States or of any of them," and inserting "of any one of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. The committee have an amendment to propose to section 766. It is an amendment of considerable length, but unfortunately I have it not here, not expecting that this section would be reached to-night. I suppose that the section can be passed over, with an understanding that we may return to it hereafter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There was a general understanding at the last evening session that any section might be returned to for the purpose of amendment.

Mr. POLAND. The next section to which we wish to offer an amendment is section 767.

The section was as follows:

SEC. 767. From the final decision of such circuit court an appeal may be taken to the Supreme Court in the cases described in section 765.

Mr. POLAND. I move to amend by striking out at the end of the section the words "section 765," and inserting "the last clause of the preceding section."

Perhaps a word of explanation in reference to this amendment may be proper, although it is hardly explainable except in connection with the amendment we propose to offer to section 766.

The matter of appeals in habeas corpus cases seemed to have got into very considerable confusion. As the last section (section 766) was left, it provided that an appeal should lie in all cases from a single judge to the circuit court; which is not a correct statement of the law. Only in two classes of cases can an appeal be taken in habeas corpus cases from a single judge to the circuit court. One class of cases arises under the act of 1842, an act that was passed immediately after the McLeod difficulty; the second class of cases arises under the habeas corpus act of 1867, where a person claims to be deprived of his liberty in violation of some provision of the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States. In these two classes of cases, and in no other, does an appeal lie from a single judge to the circuit court. In both these classes of cases the law did provide that an appeal should lie from the circuit court to the Supreme Court. But it will be recollected that a few years ago the right of appeal to the Supreme Court in one of those classes of cases was repealed.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I remember the fraudulent circumstances under which that repeal was got through; and I think the provision ought to be restored as part of the existing law. Indeed, I think it is part of it, notwithstanding the repeal.

Mr. POLAND. I will say to my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDREDGE] that the other day (he may not have been present at the time) our committee reported an independent bill, which the House passed, to restore this right of appeal.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I am very glad the gentleman is coming to his senses.

Mr. POLAND. I am not aware that I was ever out of my senses on this subject.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Perhaps I ought not to insinuate that the gentleman voted for the act that was passed several years ago.

Mr. POLAND. If there was any fraud in the matter, it was as much a fraud on me as on my friend from Wisconsin.

Mr. ELDREDGE. The gentleman knows very well that not a member on this side of the House, and very few on the other side, understood anything about the effect of that repealing act. The committee ought to provide for the restoration of the statute that was at that time repealed. If there is any case in which there ought to be an appeal to the court of last resort it is a case in which the liberty of the citizen is concerned.

Mr. POLAND. The committee did not feel at liberty to insert anything in this revision but existing statutes. We, however, took it upon ourselves to report an independent bill, which, when our committee was on regular call the other day, was passed unanimously by this House.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Does it cover the provision which was repealed?

Mr. POLAND. Precisely.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Repealed by the smuggling that was practiced on the House.

Mr. POLAND. I hope the gentleman does not mean anything personal by his remark.

Mr. ELDREDGE. No, sir; I am simply expressing the character of the legislation. My remark has nothing to do with persons.

Mr. POLAND. The bill passed the other day restores fully the provision that was repealed.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I am glad of it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. I move, on page 193, section 823, line 4, to strike out the word "nineteen," and insert "fifteen;" so it will read:

SEC. 823. The following shall be causes of disqualification and challenge of grand and petit jurors in the courts of the United States, in addition to the causes existing by virtue of section 815, namely: Without duress and coercion to have taken up arms or to have joined any insurrection or rebellion against the United States; to have adhered to any insurrection or rebellion, giving it aid and comfort; to have given, directly or indirectly, any assistance in money, arms, horses, clothes, or anything whatever, to or for the use or benefit of any person whom the giver of such assistance knew to have joined, or to be about to join, any insurrection or rebellion, or to have resisted, or to be about to resist, with force of arms, the execution of the laws of the United States, or whom he had good ground to believe to have joined, or to be about to join, any insurrection or rebellion, or to have resisted, or to be about to resist, with force of arms, the execution of the laws of the United States; or to have counseled or advised any person to join any insurrection or rebellion, or to resist with force of arms the laws of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. I move, on page 199, lines 71 and 72, to strike out "Secretary of the Interior," and insert "Attorney-General;" so it will read:

For transporting criminals convicted of a crime in any district or Territory where there is no penitentiary available for the confinement of convicts of the United States, to a prison in another district or Territory designated by the Attorney-General, the reasonable actual expense of transportation of the criminals, the marshal, and the guards, and the necessary subsistence and hire.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. I move, on page 200, section 833, in line 8, to strike out "Secretary of the Interior," and insert "Attorney-General;" so it will read:

SEC. 833. There shall be paid to the marshal his fees for services rendered for the United States, for summoning jurors and witnesses in behalf of the United States, and in behalf of any prisoner to be tried for a capital offense, for the maintenance of prisoners of the United States confined in jail for any criminal offense; also, for his reasonable actual expense for the transportation of criminals, and of the marshal and guards, to prisons designated by the Attorney-General, and for hire and subsistence in that behalf, as hereinbefore provided; also, his fees for the commitment or discharge of prisoners; his expenses necessarily incurred for fuel, lights, and other contingencies that may accrue in holding the courts within his district, and providing the books necessary to record the proceedings thereof: Provided, That he shall not incur, or be allowed, an expense of more than twenty dollars in any one year for furniture, or fifty dollars for rent of a building and making improvements thereon without first submitting a statement and estimates to the Attorney-General and getting his instructions in the premises.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. I move on page 217, section 905, in line 4, to strike out the words "by said act;" so it will read:

SEC. 905. In the proceedings to restore the records of the circuit and district courts of the northern district of Illinois, destroyed by fire on the 9th of October, 1871, under the three preceding sections, the notice required may be served upon any non-resident of said district anywhere within the jurisdiction of the United States, or in any foreign country, the proof of the service of such notice, if made in a foreign country, to be certified by a minister or consul of the United States in such country, under his official seal.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. I move on page 223, section 920, line 8, to strike out the words "at common law or;" so it will read:

SEC. 920. The Supreme Court shall have power to prescribe, from time to time, and in any manner not inconsistent with any law of the United States, the forms of writs and other process, the modes of framing and filing proceedings and pleadings, of taking and obtaining evidence, of obtaining discovery, of proceeding to obtain relief, of drawing up, entering, and enrolling decrees, and of proceeding before trustees appointed by the court, and generally to regulate the whole practice to be used in suits in equity or admiralty, by the circuit and district courts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. I move on page 227, section 941, in line 29, after the word "delay," to strike out the following:

And when any prosecution shall be commenced, on account of the seizure of any ship or vessel, goods, wares, or merchandise, and judgment shall be given for the claimant or claimants, if it shall appear to the court before whom such prosecution shall be tried that there was a reasonable cause of seizure, the said court shall cause a proper certificate or entry to be made thereof, and in such case the claimant or claimants shall not be entitled to costs, nor shall the person who made the seizure, or the prosecutor, be liable to action, suit, or judgment on account of such seizure and prosecution: Provided, That the ship or vessel, goods, wares, or merchandise, be, after judgment, forthwith returned to such claimant or claimants, his, her, or their agent or agents.

So it will read:

SEC. 941. Upon the prayer of any claimant to the court, that any vessel, goods, wares, or merchandise, seized and prosecuted under any law respecting the revenue from imports or tonnage, or the registering and recording, or the enrolling and licensing of vessels, or any part thereof, should be delivered to him, the court shall appoint three proper persons to appraise such property, who shall be sworn in open court, or before a commissioner appointed by the district court to administer oaths to appraisers, for the faithful discharge of their duty; and the appraisement shall be made at the expense of the party on whose prayer it is granted. If, on the return of the appraisement, the claimant, with one or more sureties, to be approved by the court, shall execute a bond to the United States for the payment of a sum equal to the sum at which the property prayed to be delivered is appraised, and produce a certificate from the collector of the district where the trial is had, and of the naval officer thereof, if any there be, that the duties on the goods, wares, and merchandise, or tonnage duty on the vessel so claimed, have been paid or secured in like manner as if the same had been legally entered, the court shall, by rule, order such vessel, goods, wares, or merchandise to be delivered to such claimant; and the said bond shall be lodged with the proper officer of the court. If judgment passes in favor of the claimant, the court shall cause the said bond to be canceled; but if judgment passes against the claimant, as to the whole or any part of such vessel, goods, wares, or merchandise, and the claimant does not within twenty days thereafter pay into the court, or to the proper officer thereof, the amount of the appraised value of such vessel, goods, wares, or merchandise so condemned, with the costs, judgment shall be granted upon the bond, on motion in open court, without further delay.

Mr. POLAND. That portion of the section which is proposed to be stricken out is in another place, in section 973.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. I move on page 231, section 956, in line 5, before the word "court," to insert the word "the;" so it will read:

SEC. 956. A bill of exceptions allowed in any cause shall be deemed sufficiently authenticated if signed by the judge of the court in which the cause was tried, or by the presiding judge thereof, if more than one judge sat on the trial of the cause, without any seal of the court or judge being annexed thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. I move on page 234, section 972, in line 4, to strike out "assessor, assistant assessor;" so it will read:

SEC. 972. When a suit for the recovery of any penalty or forfeiture accruing under any law providing internal revenue is brought upon information received from any person other than a collector, deputy collector, or inspector of internal revenue, the United States shall not be subject to any costs of suit.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. I move on page 237, section 995, in lines 5 and 6, to strike out the words "or may hereafter be;" so it will read:

SEC. 995. Persons imprisoned on process issuing from any court of the United States in civil actions, as well at the suit of the United States as at the suit of any person, shall be entitled to the same privileges of the yards of the respective jails as persons confined in like cases on process from the courts of the respective States are entitled to, and under the like regulations and restrictions.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. I move on page 240, section 1010, in line 4, to strike out the word "ten," and in lieu thereof insert the word "sixty;" so it will read:

SEC. 1010. In any case where a writ of error may be a supersedeas, the defendant may obtain such supersedeas by serving the writ of error, by lodging a copy thereof for the adverse party in the clerk's office where the record remains, within sixty days, Sundays exclusive, after the rendering of the judgment complained of, and giving the security required by law on the issuing of the citation. But if he desires to stay process on the judgment, he may, having served his writ of error as aforesaid, give the security required by law within sixty days after the rendition of such judgment, or afterward with the permission of a justice or judge of the appellate court. And in such cases where a writ of error may be a supersedeas, executions shall not issue until the expiration of the said term of ten days.

I wish to explain in reference to this correction, to show precisely why it is made, that the old judiciary act required that an appeal or writ of error should be filed within ten days in order to operate as a supersedeas. The act of 1872, making a good many changes in the practice in the United States courts in appeals, &c., provided that the supersedeas bond might be filed in sixty days. It said nothing in terms in relation to what time the appeal or writ of error must be filed, but said the supersedeas bond might be filed within sixty days.

The Supreme Court at this term have given a construction to that statute; and have unanimously decided that an appeal or writ of error if filed within sixty days operates as a supersedeas; and we have made this change to correspond to the construction which the Supreme Court have put upon the act of last year, the act of 1872.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. I offer also the following amendment:

In the last line of the same section, section 1010, strike out the word "ten" and insert the word "sixty."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. The next amendment is in section 1014.

The section was as follows:

SEC. 1014. There shall be no reversal in the Supreme Court or a circuit court upon a writ of error, for error in ruling and plea in abatement, other than a plea to the jurisdiction of the court, or for any error in fact.

Mr. POLAND. I offer the following amendment:

After the words "court or," where they first occur, insert the word "in."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. POLAND. If the gentleman will withdraw his motion for a few minutes longer I may agree to it.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. How long?

Mr. POLAND. I should be glad if we could go through the judiciary act. We are within a few pages of the end of it.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. POLAND. My next amendment is on page 246, section 1046.

The section was as follows:

SEC. 1046. No person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for treason or other capital offense, willful murder or forgery excepted, unless the indictment is found within three years next after such treason or capital offense is done or committed.

Mr. POLAND. I offer the following amendment:

In line 2 strike out the words "or forgery."

This section was copied from the old crimes act at the time when forgery was a capital offense. But inasmuch as for seventy-five years forgery has not been a capital offense in this country, we think it looks a little incongruous to retain it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. The next amendments are in sections 1048 and 1049, in the chapter entitled "Limitations."

Sections 1048 and 1049 were as follows:

SEC. 1048. No person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any crime arising under the revenue laws, or the slave-trade laws of the United States, unless the indictment is found or the information is instituted within five years next after the committing of such crime.

SEC. 1049. Nothing in the three preceding sections shall extend to any person fleeing from justice.

Mr. POLAND. The sections should be transposed, and section 1049 placed before section 1048. I move to amend by making that change, and also to strike out the word "three" in the section now numbered 1049, and insert "two" instead thereof.

Perhaps a word of explanation should be given in reference to this. The original crimes act made provision for treason and capital offenses, and then the general limitation for prosecution was two years; and that act had the saving clause which is in this section, that it should not apply to persons who had fled from justice. Subsequently an act was passed making certain offenses against the revenue laws criminal, and giving five years within which to prosecute; and a few years later an act was passed making participation in the slave-trade criminal, and providing that offenses against that act might be prosecuted within five years. In neither of those acts is there any such provision as that it shall not apply to persons fleeing from justice. And where provision is made for a new offense and for a new statute of limitations, the committee are of opinion that this provision in the general criminal act could not apply to them. They considered it should apply to prosecutions under the general act, and not to those where there is a special statute. It is on that ground we propose this change.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. The next amendment is on page 252, section 1073.

The section was as follows:

SEC. 1073. The said court shall have power to establish rules for its government and for the regulation of practice therein, and it may punish for contempt in the manner prescribed by the common law, and may exercise such powers as are necessary to carry into effect the powers granted to it by law.

Mr. POLAND. I offer the following amendment:

In line 4, after the words "common law," insert the words "may appoint commissioners."

The original act establishing the Court of Claims provided that they might appoint commissioners to take testimony. The later act provided that they might appoint commissioners; and the court, as I understand, is in the practice of appointing commissioners to do various things besides taking testimony.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Is there no limitation now? Can they appoint commissioners for any purpose whatever?

Mr. POLAND. This is the very language of the law, "may appoint commissioners." The revisers, inasmuch as there was previously an act authorizing the court to appoint commissioners to take testimony, left out the language of the latter act, the general language, "may appoint commissioners." We have merely restored the words of a later act, which the commissioners left out, supposing it covered by an older law. And I learn, by some conversation with the judges of the court, that they exercise this power of appointing commissioners for some other purpose than to take testimony, and derive their authority from this later law.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. I move to amend section 1088 by adding to it the words, "or other appropriation made by Congress for that purpose," so that it will read:

SEC. 1088. When testimony is taken for the claimant, the fees of the commissioner before whom it is taken, and the cost of the commission and notice, shall be paid by such claimant; and when it is taken at the instance of the Government such fees, together with all postage incurred by the Assistant Attorney-General, shall be paid out of the contingent fund provided for the Court of Claims, or other appropriation made by Congress for that purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. A member of the committee having in charge the chapters following, in relation to the Army, is not quite prepared to report in reference to them. There are other portions of the work which the committee are prepared to go on with, but we will not ask gentlemen to stay here any longer to-night. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at nine o'clock and twelve minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. ATKINS: The petition of Professor I. M. Wright and 108 citizens of Montgomery County, Tennessee, praying for the settlement and payment of the claims of the Southern Methodist publishing house, at Nashville, Tennessee, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BECK: The petition of the Kentucky Agricultural and Mechanical Association, for compensation for damages to, and occupation of, their grounds by United States troops, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BELL: The petition of Wesley Jones, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BUFFINTON: The petition of citizens of Middletown, Massachusetts, for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the liquor traffic, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BUTLER, of Tennessee: The petition of John Malicoat, for relief, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CESSNA: Several petitions from citizens of Somerset County, Pennsylvania, for the remission of duties on friction and lucifer matches, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CHIPMAN: The memorial of Edward Lawrence & Co., merchants of Liverpool, England, asking for the payment of the proceeds of five hundred and sixty-two bales of cotton paid into the United States Treasury, to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, the petition of E. F. M. Faehtz and F. W. Pratt, publishers of the Real Estate Directory of the city of Washington, for a subscription for said work for use in the public offices of Washington, to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. COBB, of Kansas: The petition of Louis Bryant and others, depot teamsters and hostlers at Leavenworth, Kansas, for payment for extra hours of labor, to the Committee on Claims.

Also, the memorial of W. L. Simons and 64 other members of the Kansas Legislature, relative to lands granted to railroads in Kansas, claimed to be forfeited, to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. COX: The petition of A. Hamilton & Co., C. F. Hovey & Co., and others, importers of hand-made lace goods, in the city of Boston, for the reduction of duty on all real or hand-made lace goods to 20 per cent. ad valorem, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, the petition of Brosins & Co. and others, importers, of Baltimore, of similar import, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DANFORD: The petition of Mrs. Charlotte L. Ames, widow of Horatio Ames, deceased, for reimbursement for costly experiments made by her husband, and for reasonable allowances by way of royalty on his patents and inventions, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. ELLIOTT: The petition of Mary A. Bowen, for payment for extra services, as messenger in the Patent-Office, of her deceased husband, Anthony Bowen, to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HALE, of Maine: The petition of Mary Ann Flye, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAYS: Petition of the Boards of Trade of Mobile, Alabama, and Columbus, Mississippi, for the removal of obstructions from the Tombigbee River, to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. LAMISON: The petition of Brown Brothers & Co., Duncan, Sherman & Co., and others, bankers and merchants of the city of New York, representing that a resumption of specie payments at the earliest practicable time is imperatively required, and praying that no more issues of paper shall take place, and that the greenbacks already issued out of the so-called reserve shall be withdrawn again as speedily as possible, to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. LYNCH: The petition of Horace D. Mead, for payment for the proceeds of certain cotton, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. O'BRIEN: The petition of Helen Wyvill, for a pension, to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions and War of 1812.

Also, the petition of John Swearer, for relief, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. O'NEILL: The petition of citizens of Philadelphia, for the redemption of United States notes with bonds, payable on demand, with said notes, to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. PARSONS: The petition of William Carl, for the correction of his military record, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ROSS: The petition of citizens of Williamsport, Pennsylvania, for the repeal of the second section of the act of June 6, 1872, which makes a reduction of 10 per cent. on certain duties, to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SCUDDER, of New York: The petition of coasting captains and vessel-owners of New York, for the erection of a light-house at the entrance of Cold Spring Harbor, Long Island, to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. SHELDON: The petition of Octavia W. Besancon, for compensation for occupation of her plantation in Jefferson Parish, Louisiana, and for injury done thereto, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SMITH, of Virginia: The petition of Ann Henderson, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SPEER: Three petitions from citizens of Cambria County, and one from citizens of Huntington County, Pennsylvania, in favor of the repeal of section 2 of act of June 6, 1872, reducing the duties on certain articles; and remonstrating against imposing a duty upon tea and coffee.

By Mr. WELLS: The petition of Emma A. Porch, for relief, to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WILSON, of Iowa: The petition of A. and Letta Baglay, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 29, 1874.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

On motion of Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings was dispensed with.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. FENTON. I present the petition of bankers, merchants, and citizens of the city of New York—I should think fully 200 in number—upon the subject of an additional issue of paper money. The high standing and character of these petitioners, as well as the clear and forcible statement of their views upon this question, will, I trust, command the very earnest attention of the Senate. They conclude their petition by a prayer—

That no more issue of paper shall take place, and that the greenbacks already issued out of the so-called reserve shall be withdrawn again as speedily as possible. In the present state of the money market the Government can obtain whatever money they require, as a loan, at a low rate of interest, and this, your petitioners respectfully suggest, would be a far better way of obtaining funds than by issuing irredeemable currency.

I move that this petition be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FENTON presented the petition of the Twelfth-street Reformed church of Brooklyn, New York, signed by the pastor and officers; the petition of David J. Patterson and other citizens of Brooklyn, New York; and the petition of W. P. Gibson and other citizens of New York City, praying for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, its relations to pauperism, crime, the public health, and general welfare; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FENTON. I also present the petition of several citizens of Allegany County, New York, well known to me as highly respectable business men, who request the enactment of laws directing the redemption or conversion of United States notes, by issuing therefor, at the option of the holder, bonds of the denomination of $1,000 or any multiple thereof and other processes, by which our present currency, I should infer, would be somewhat increased. I move that this petition be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. From another quarter of the country I present the memorial of James W. Lister and 94 others, citizens of Livingston County, Illinois, praying Congress to abolish the present monetary system, by substituting in lieu of national-bank notes a full legal-tender currency issued directly from the Treasury, to be declared equal with coin and interconvertible with Government bonds, bearing a rate of interest not exceeding 3.65 per cent.; principal and interest of which to be paid in currency. I move the reference of this memorial to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL presented a petition of citizens of Oregon, asking the extension of the money-order system to every post-office in the United States, with such a low rate of expense as shall be equitable and just toward the people; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. LEWIS presented the petition of F. W. E. Lohman, for himself and Samuel Ruth and Charles M. Carter, of Richmond, Virginia, praying remuneration for services rendered the United States Army during the late war; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CONKLING presented the petition of Eliza Wells, widow and administratrix of Henry A. Wells, deceased, praying for an extension of certain letters-patent, dated April 25, 1846, for improvements in machinery for manufacturing hat-bodies; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. RAMSEY. I present a memorial of the Legislature of the Territory of Dakota, and also appended to it the petition of a large number of citizens resident in the northern part of that Territory, asking for its division and the organization of a new Territory. I move that the memorial and petition be referred to the Committee on Territories.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS presented papers relating to the destruction, by Federal troops, under General Milroy, during the late war, of the Presbyterian church at Luney's Creek, Hardy County, West Virginia; which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BOUTWELL presented the petition of the Newton Universalist church of Newton, Massachusetts, praying for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, its relations to pauperism, crime, the public health, and general welfare; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CONOVER presented a memorial of the Legislature of Florida, asking an appropriation for the purpose of clearing out and dredging the Ocklawaha River, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of the city council of Pensacola, Florida, in favor of such legislation as will prevent the introduction of yellow fever, and also such legislation for the protection of the navigable rivers, bays, harbors, and ports of the United States as will prevent the filling up and destruction of the same by the discharge of ballast and other materials therein; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BOGY presented the petition of Henry Woodson, late of Company H, Fifth Regiment Missouri State Militia, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Lucinda Shrum, widow of Jacob R. Shrum, late of Company A, Forty-ninth Regiment Missouri Volunteers, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Patsey Inlow, widow of Abraham Inlow, late of Company F, Fifty-third Regiment Enrolled Missouri Militia, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Jemima Maxwell, widow of John Maxwell, late of Company D, Fifth Missouri State Militia, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Mountjoy Browning, late of Company A, Tenth Missouri State Militia Cavalry, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of William Daily, late of Company B, Third Missouri State Militia, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I submit the following order:

Ordered, That the memorial and accompanying papers of J. K. and Sarah A. J. Hodges, heirs at law of Lieutenant Charles Jones, of the Virginia line, be withdrawn from the files and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has there been an adverse report?

Mr. JOHNSTON. I think not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order will be entered.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of March 11, 1873, information in relation to the space allotted to each steerage immigrant on board ship, to report the same back, and recommend that it be printed; and I ask for the present consideration of the report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. PRATT. The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 307) granting a pension to Henry Oglesby, have directed me to submit an adverse report thereon, and to move its indefinite postponement. I may state here briefly that upon referring the case to the Commissioner of Pensions for information on the subject, he desired that the papers should be returned to him for the purpose of reconsidering the case. Some evidence has been furnished that induces him to believe that it would be considered favorably; and as long as favorable action may be had at the Department it is not worth while to pass a special bill for the relief of this party.

The report was ordered to be printed, and the bill was indefinitely postponed.

Mr. PRATT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 217) granting a pension to Julia A. Smith, reported it without amendment; and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Dr. Edward H. Calvert, of the District of Columbia, praying compensation for the injury done his property in Washington by the construction of Fort Wagner thereon, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 395) for the relief of Edward H. Calvert.

The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CONKLING asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 396) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof," approved June 3, 1874; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BOUTWELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 397) to provide for a more efficient system of quarantine; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

THE CALENDAR.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There being no further morning business, is it the pleasure of the Senate that the Calendar shall be proceeded with?

Mr. SHERMAN. To avoid all delay, I move that the rule under which we acted yesterday shall be the rule until the Calendar is disposed of—that after the morning business is concluded we proceed during the remainder of the morning hour with the Calendar, under the Anthony rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will consider that to be the pleasure of the Senate until some other order shall be entered. The Secretary will resume the Calendar from the point where the Senate terminated yesterday.

REDUCTION OF CAPITAL STOCK OF NATIONAL BANKS.

The first bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 147) authorizing national banks that have decided to reduce their capital stock to withdraw a portion of bonds upon retiring their own circulating notes, or depositing lawful money of the United States in the proportion provided by law.

Mr. SCOTT. The substance of that bill has already been reported in a bill which was before the Senate, and the consideration of which has been postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be laid aside.

BISHOP & CO.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 272) for the relief of Bishop & Co., bankers of Honolulu, Hawaiian Islands.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. WEST. I do not see the chairman of the Committee on Commerce present, and I should be glad to hear from the member of that committee who reported this bill some explanation of it.

Mr. RAMSEY. I suggest to the Senator to call for the reading of the report. That will give him all the information he desires.

Mr. WEST. The Senator can do that himself.

Mr. RAMSEY. You are not referring to me, I presume.

Mr. WEST. Let us have the report read, then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that there is no report from the committee; but with the accompanying papers there is a communication from the Secretary of State.

Mr. WEST. That will answer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That letter will be read.

Mr. SHERMAN. That seems to be a very long paper. I think as a rule we ought not to allow any bill to pass without objection unless there is a report accompanying it. I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Commerce, with a view to have a written report.

The motion was agreed to.

GAS USED IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be instructed to inquire as to the amount of gas consumed and paid for by the Government at Washington; whether its illuminating power is constantly tested; and whether its cost cannot properly be diminished.

All I desire to say in relation to this resolution is that the amount of gas consumed by the Government in the various Government buildings and grounds here is very large, costing some years nearly $100,000, as I am told. The price has been regulated by law. During the war it was raised up to a very much higher figure than it had been before the war, and it has not been reduced to the old standard, although the price of coal has been very much reduced. Not to do any injustice to the company, and yet to practice some economy, it seems proper that we should investigate the facts.

Besides this, there is a new process in the manufacture of gas, I believe, called the hydrocarbon process, by which the cost is very much reduced. It has been in operation in other countries for some time. I do not know that it is in operation anywhere in this country, but it ought to be; and I do know that the price of gas furnished in the city of London, of a standard quality, tested every day, is about one-third of what we pay for it here. I think the subject is a very proper one to be investigated; and therefore I ask for the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

STATIONERY FOR REPORTERS' GALLERY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair asks the attention of the Senate for a moment, and desires its advice in regard to a matter in which he has been called upon to act since he has taken the chair.

The press of the country have called the attention of the country repeatedly to abuses growing out of the use of the contingent fund of the Senate. The Chair is aware of but one, and that is the furnishing of stationery for the reporters' gallery of the Senate. After taking the chair, the present occupant was applied to on two or three occasions to sign orders for stationery to be sent to the reporters' gallery. On inquiry he was informed that that was the settled practice, and he signed those orders. Two or three are now upon the table, which the present occupant of the chair is requested to sign. Having examined the law, he is unable to find any authority whatever for doing this. If the Senate are satisfied with the course that has been pursued, I shall continue to sign these orders; if not, I will give my check for the amount covered by those I have signed, and thus correct the only abuse of which the Chair is informed that exists in regard to the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Chair read the account?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are several items of account here.

Mr. CONKLING. Any one, that we may know the articles that are charged.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On January 8 the Chair signed an order in this form:

Please furnish for the use of the reporters' gallery, the following stationery: 4 dozen pencils, 500 envelopes, small.

On a subsequent day the following order was signed:

Please forward for the use of the reporters' gallery: ½ ream small note, 3 dozen lead-pencils, ½ dozen small erasers, 2 dozen pen-holders, ½ dozen sheets large blotting paper.

On the 15th of January:

One ream foolscap, 1 ream note-paper, 1 ream small note paper, 2 dozen pen-holders, 1 box pens, 4 dozen pencils.

These are specimens. There are several that have already been signed by the present occupant of the chair.

Mr. CONKLING. May I inquire of the Chair whence these orders come to the Chair; who sends them or brings them?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. So far as the Chair understands, the process is this: when stationery is wanted in the reporters' gallery they inform the stationer and he sends here an order to be signed, to justify him in delivering it.

Mr. CONKLING. May I understand another thing? Is this stationery used by the correspondents of newspapers who sit in the gallery of the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has no knowledge of his own as to who uses it.

Mr. CONKLING. But "by their going to the stationer's" the Chair means to inform the Senate that the persons in the reporters' gallery, whoever they may be, using this stationery, go to the stationery-room to get it and send the order to the Chair from there to sign.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the process to be this: when the reporters want more stationery they inform the stationer of that fact, and he sends an order to the Chair to sign, directing him to furnish it; and upon those orders he does furnish it to the reporters in the gallery.

Mr. CONKLING. And the reporters of whom the Chair now speaks are not the official reporters of the Senate, but reporters for newspapers sitting in the reporters' gallery.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the way the Chair understands it. All these are orders for "stationery for the reporters' gallery." The Chair would add that the amount which is called for of course is stated by the reporters themselves, and from that statement the stationer sends an order to the Chair to be signed; and four of these orders have already been signed by the present occupant of the Chair. He will continue to sign them if the pleasure of the Senate indorses that proceeding. [A pause.] The next bill on the Calendar will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The next bill on the Calendar is the bill (S. No. 302) for the relief of Dr. Edward Jarvis.

Mr. HAMLIN. What became of the matter to which the Chair invited the attention of the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair asked the advice of the Senate in the premises, and stated that if the Senate did not advise him he would pursue the course that has been pursued, as he is informed, for several years.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the Chair receive kindly advice from Senators?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Exceedingly kindly.

Mr. HAMLIN. Then I will advise as one. I never knew anything of this practice when I presided in the chair—it did not then exist—but I presume it had its origin in this way: Formerly stationery was used ad libitum by the Senate, and it was said, and I guess truthfully, that sometimes some Senators used it pretty liberally, and at that period of time perhaps it was used freely by the Secretary of the Senate, who also had access to it; and when there was no restriction upon it, I presume quantities were passed over to the reporters; and that is the way the practice grew up. Subsequently, however, we passed a law in which we defined precisely the amount beyond which no Senator shall be entitled to stationery. Now that limitation of the law which is upon us individually ought certainly to apply as forcibly to everybody else. If it be in order, I will move that the practice of distributing stationery for newspaper reporters from the stationery-room be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that it be ordered that hereafter the practice of furnishing stationery to the reporters' gallery be discontinued.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I rise for the purpose of making perhaps an inquiry, and perhaps a request; perhaps both. I find, upon looking at the Congressional Directory, more than two pages of names of persons who are said to be correspondents of the press. I presume they have their places both in the Senate gallery and in the gallery of the House. I find among them several names of ladies. The statement made by the Chair would lead to the supposition that each one of the reporters whose name is contained in this list has been in the habit of calling upon the chairman of the Committee on Contingent Expenses to furnish him or her with the necessary stationery to do the correspondence for their newspapers.

Now, sir, the inquiry which I should like to make, if the Chair can answer it, would be whether there is any organization of these reporters, with a recognized head, through whom they make their requests upon the head of the stationery department, or whether each one of them has been in the practice of going and making his or her own requisition upon that head of the stationery department. If some of these correspondents have been doing this and others have not, it would be but justice to those who have not done it that those who have done it should be reported by the chairman of the Committee on the Contingent Expenses, so that we may know where the high code of morality contended for by the press is practiced upon and where it is not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state to the Senate that he is just informed by the Sergeant-at-Arms that a messenger in the employment of the Senate has charge of the reporters' gallery, and has charge of the stationery that is sent to the gallery and keeps it under lock and key, delivering it to the reporters as they desire it; and when he finds that he is wanting in any of the stationery needed he sends down to the stationery-room for a supply, and then the order comes to the Chair, and being signed by the Chair, is filled by the stationer.

Mr. CONKLING. How long has that been the practice?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that it has been for two or three years; or for a long time, the Sergeant-at-Arms says.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Mr. President, under what order of the Senate, or of officers of the Senate, has that practice been allowed and continued?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the gallery has been considered until this session of the Senate under the charge of the Vice-President, and that for the last four years this has been a courtesy of the Vice-President extended to that gallery. This matter was brought to the attention of the Senate by the Chair, asking for advice in the premises, he being unable to ascertain that there was any authority for doing it, and he having inadvertently signed three or four orders before his attention was called to the subject. The Senator from Maine, the Senator's colleague, has moved that an order be entered that that practice of furnishing stationery be dispensed with, which is the pending motion.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Before that passes, I would inquire whether my colleague would not think it worth while for us to have that a subject of investigation by the Committee on Contingent Expenses, to see to what extent it has gone and what is the actual condition of it, before that order is entered by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine can move to refer the order to the committee.

Mr. HAMLIN. If my colleague will make such a motion I will withdraw mine.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I move that it be referred to the committee, with instructions to report the full particulars in regard to this practice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine on the left [Mr. HAMLIN] withdraws his motion, and his colleague [Mr. MORRILL] moves that the subject be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, with instructions to inquire and report as to the extent to which this practice has obtained.

Mr. FENTON. As this stationery was furnished from the contingent fund, I was about to make the remark that I hoped the motion of the honorable Senator [Mr. HAMLIN] would not prevail. The Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate are commissioned by law to overlook and determine upon this class of expenditures. There is no authority, I am very confident, for the Vice-President to make an order upon the stationery department. I am not sure, however, while this contingent fund is furnished, that it is not quite as legitimate to distribute a portion of the stationery to the reporters of the press who occupy a place in the reporters' gallery as the manner in which much of it has been distributed or disposed of. As long as we have a fund for this purpose the people will consent to pay, I think, for the amount that the reporters use for the information which they furnish the country daily of our doings here. It is not the greatest abuse growing out of this matter. But, sir, I am opposed to this whole thing of a contingent fund without greater limitations or restrictions than there are now upon it, and I hope that the whole practice will be discontinued.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Referring to a remark of the Senator from New York, I desire to say that the Senate of the United States, and the Senate alone, is accountable for the stationery; and it has become a very prolific source of speculation in the country as to what we do with this vast amount, as it is supposed, of stationery, from time to time. Now, the only view I have in this matter is, as this is the first time it occurred to me and was brought to my knowledge in any way whatever, it becomes a matter of interest to see what proportion of the stationery goes in this direction. It may be, as the Senator from New York suggests, that we shall, on the whole, conclude that that is a good thing to do; but if it is a good thing to do it ought to be done specifically—not on our account, but on account of the press of the country. The real difficulty is that we are charged with a very large expenditure, in the public eye, for stationery, and a variety of things. Therefore I think it is eminently fit that the committee should tell us precisely about this matter, so that if it is desirable to appropriate for this object, it should be a specific appropriation.

Mr. FENTON. I did not mean to oppose the motion of the Senator from Maine, [Mr. MORRILL.] I remarked that I rose for the purpose of opposing the motion, to which I referred, of the honorable Senator from Maine nearest to me, [Mr. HAMLIN.] The direction now suggested by the Senator from Maine farthest from me, [Mr. MORRILL,] I think, is very proper.

Mr. HOWE. It does not seem to me that there need be any great difficulty or any great difference of opinion about this matter. I suppose, if the character of the Senate or the character of the Senators is at all involved in the matter of distributing this stationery, it is very easy to make whatever vindication is required. I suppose the Committee on Contingent Expenses, or some other committee of the Senate, can tell any day whether from the stationery-room any Senator has drawn any more stationery than the law allowed him. I suppose the keeper of the stationery can show every dollar that he has invested in that kind of property, and I suppose he can show just what he has done with every particle of the property so purchased; how much of it he has delivered to Senators; how much he has delivered to committees; and how much he has delivered to somebody else, neither Senators nor committees; and how much of it he has on hand; so that the exact amount of blame, if any, to be imputed to anybody may be made very certain. There need be no cloud resting upon any individual that does not properly belong to him. I hope, if this matter is to go to the committee, that they will give the public all the satisfaction they require. I will inquire of the Chair what the precise motion before the Senate is?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion made by the Senator from Maine on the right of the chair, [Mr. MORRILL,] to refer to the Committee on Contingent Expenses the order which is proposed by the Senator from Maine on the left of the chair, [Mr. HAMLIN,] that the practice of furnishing stationery to the reporters' gallery be dispensed with.

Mr. HOWE. But I understood it was to be referred with instructions of some sort.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOWE. I will inquire what they are?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The instructions were stated orally, that the committee should ascertain when this practice arose, and how much had been furnished under it heretofore, and whether it should be continued.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The instructions have now been reduced to writing; let them be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

With instructions to report to the Senate when the practice of furnishing stationery to the reporters' gallery began, and the cost of the stationery furnished, and whether such practice should not be discontinued.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will now report the next bill on the Calendar.

DR. EDWARD JARVIS.

The bill (S. No. 302) for the relief of Dr. Edward Jarvis was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Dr. Edward Jarvis the sum of $1,500 in full for his services in the preparation of the United States census for 1850.

Mr. CONKLING. I should like to hear the report read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Claims, on the 14th instant:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Dr. Edward Jarvis, asking pay for services in compiling statistics for census, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to report:

That the petitioner, being a gentleman of distinguished scientific attainments, was engaged by J. D. B. De Bow, then Superintendent of the United States Census, to arrange and compile certain statistics which were of great value, and which were published in the census report. That these services were rendered during the years 1853, 1854, 1855, and were, in the judgment of your committee, very valuable to the Government, and such as could be rendered only by a person of eminent scientific learning, and through his extensive research necessarily occupied considerable time.

Your committee do not deem it necessary to go into the details of Dr. Jarvis's services, but will content itself in submitting the account itself, and the indorsement of it by Dr. J. D. B. De Bow, late Superintendent of the Census.

DORCHESTER, MASSACHUSETTS, January 1, 1856.

The United States to Edward Jarvis, M. D., Dr.

1853, 1854, 1855. For professional and clerical labor, investigations of subjects, examining records, making calculations, answering questions, and solving difficulties at the request of J. D. B. De Bow, esq., Superintendent of the Census Department during the years 1853, 1854, 1855, all in connection with the preparation of three census volumes and reports.....$1,500

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 1, 1858.

I certify that Dr. Edward Jarvis, of Massachusetts, performed the services mentioned by him, though without any agreement as to compensation. As an eminent statistician I deemed it important to advise with him upon many matters, and I frequently referred to his valuable aid in the volumes which I published in the Census Office. Upon the mortality tables his services were especially large and laborious, involving much clerical labor and tedious calculations. Under the law regulating the Census Office I had no power to remunerate Dr. Jarvis, but had it been otherwise I should have considered the sum indicated by him to be fair and just, and I therefore recommend its payment by Congress.

J. D. B. DE BOW,
Late Superintendent United States Census.

After fully considering the services rendered, their character and importance, your committee are of the opinion that the claim is a just one, and should be paid. They therefore report the accompanying bill, and recommend its passage.

Mr. HOWE. That is an old acquaintance of mine. I have had several occasions to give my own opinion of the merits of that claim. I have never been able, up to the present time, to see any good reason why the Government should pay that bill; and I do not yet. The Senate will see in a moment, I think, that this is an appropriation to perfect and complete a Commissioner of the Census. The Government selected the very man they wanted Commissioner of Census, gave him all the help that was thought to be necessary, and set him to work to report the results of that census to us. With all the help the Government supplied the Commissioner did not feel himself quite equal to the task, and he stepped out on to the streets and procured some assistance, asked questions, consulted, got advice, put himself to school perhaps. I have no reason to doubt that it was not a proper step for him to take; but I do not see the propriety of the Government being called upon at this time to pay for his education. On this idea I have always opposed the payment of this claim up to this time, and shall vote against it now.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, I am sorry that the Senator from Wisconsin belittles this claim, which I have always thought to be just. Dr. Jarvis did not reside in Washington, nor was he within any easy distance. The Commissioner of the Census could not step into the street and confer with him, and receive out of his abundance the knowledge needed; he was obliged to communicate with him by writing, and Dr. Jarvis, an expert in such matters, answered. I was here at the time and knew of the consultations. I knew also much of his answers. I believe his services were important and essential. I think they entered into that census report; and I know not why, even though thus tardily, we should hesitate to pay the laborer for what he has done.

Did he not do it? Did he not render the service? Is there any doubt about it? Was not the Commissioner authorized to employ him; or if not directly authorized, was not the employment so entirely in the line of his service that Congress has nothing to do but to recognize it?

I believe, sir, the work was done; faithfully done; done as very few others in the country could do it—perhaps as no other in the country could do it—for I believe I may say of this eminent statistician that in his own peculiar department he is without a superior, if not without a peer. For years he has devoted himself to these careful inquiries, and the results have already been recognized by all students throughout the civilized world. His name is known now in all the countries where statistical science is pursued. And now that he has been consulted here at home, I know no reason why he should be denied the small compensation which he asks.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, after what has been said by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts it seems scarcely necessary that I should say a word. But as I was authorized by the Committee on Claims to report this bill, I will add a single word in answer to what has been said by the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin, formerly chairman of the Committee on Claims.

I understood the Senator from Wisconsin to make the remark that a gentleman had been employed to do this work with a sufficient force. It is true that Mr. De Bow was Superintendent of the United States Census at the time these services were rendered by Dr. Jarvis; but I do not understand that a force sufficient to do the whole work was placed in his hands by Congress. An appropriation was made, it is true, to enable him to perform that very laborious work, the compiling of the seventh census. In pursuance of that general authority, as I understand it, Mr. De Bow, Superintendent of the United States Census, employed Dr. Jarvis, of Massachusetts. The testimony in the case shows Dr. Jarvis to be not only an eminent physician but an eminent vital statistician.

Mr. HOWE. Will the Senator allow me to ask a question for information?

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly.

Mr. HOWE. I understood him to speak of some authority, and my attention was withdrawn for a moment. I do not understand what the authority was under which this employment was made.

Mr. MITCHELL. Under the general authority awarded to the Superintendent of the Census, an appropriation having been placed at his command. I do not understand that any particular force was placed at his command; but in pursuance of the general authority granted by authority of an appropriation for that particular purpose, he did employ this eminent statistician residing in Massachusetts. The testimony shows that Dr. Jarvis devoted about one-third of the time for three whole years in furnishing statistics for that work. In three volumes of that census is acknowledged the valuable service rendered by Dr. Jarvis in pursuance of this employment by Mr. De Bow. His bill was afterward recognized, as the report shows, by Mr. De Bow, although that was after he had ceased to be Superintendent of the Census. I certainly see no reason why he should not be paid the very small sum he demands for the very valuable services that he rendered.

Mr. HOWE. It is a small sum, to be sure, but it involves just this question, whether each one of your Bureau officers whom you select yourselves, whose compensation you fix and propose to fix at a sum adequate to pay for his services, shall be allowed to go abroad and employ any and all the assistance which he thinks he needs. That is the question. I think not. I think Mr. De Bow undertook, by force of the appointment conferred upon him, to get up and submit to the people of the United States the results of that census. The statistics which were to compose that report, I suppose, were furnished him very largely by the assistant marshals, who ransacked the United States for that express purpose. Whatever was necessary to complete the work I should suppose might have been furnished by an eminent statistician in less than a year, which I understand to be the time estimated as having been spent by Dr. Jarvis. I make no sort of question about Dr. Jarvis's professional merits. I do not belittle his character, or seek to do so. I have no doubt he is entitled to every praise here bestowed upon him. The question is on the right of Mr. De Bow to employ him in the service of the United States.

Mr. MITCHELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question on that point, with his permission.

Mr. HOWE. Very well.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask whether or not he concedes the right on the part of Mr. De Bow to employ assistance in getting up this work?

Mr. HOWE. No; I do not concede it.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then he was to do it himself, personally.

Mr. HOWE. He should do it himself, personally, with such help, in the way of clerks, &c., as the law authorized him to get. The law undertook to provide a force abundantly adequate to take the census—and to report it—of the people of the United States; and if the law did not furnish all the assistance that was necessary, there should have been an application to the law-making power for further assistance. The whole trouble, if there was any trouble in the case, was that De Bow was not equal to the duties of the office he assumed, and he got Dr. Jarvis to finish him out.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Could it be expected that the Commissioner of the Census would be equal to arranging the health statistics of the country in the manner in which Dr. Jarvis would?

Mr. HOWE. Let me ask in reply if the Commissioners in 1860 and 1870 were or were not equal to it?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Probably the Commissioners in 1860 and 1870 were very much aided by the services which Dr. Jarvis had rendered; and I understand that he did aid in those censuses very materially. I agree with the Senator from Wisconsin that the Commissioner had no right to make this expenditure, and yet I think he acted very properly in making it. He did it at his peril, trusting to Congress to ratify the expenditure; and I think, if the service has been rendered, inasmuch as it was a service which only an expert could render, which we ought not to expect from the Commissioner, we ought to pay for it.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. Mr. President, I think that the remarks of the Senator from New Jersey—the last remarks particularly—furnish a clear reason why this bill should not pass. They point to an existing evil in nearly all the Bureaus. The Bureau officer, finding that there is something that ought to be done, that it would be a good thing to have done, employs somebody to do the thing without any authority of law, and then "trusts to Congress," in the language of the Senator, to make the proper compensation for the labor which has been performed. It is time that that practice was stopped.

This particular claim is certainly very peculiar in the items of the bill rendered—a bill "for answering questions and solving difficulties." That is the language of one of the main items of the bill. And it would appear that the Superintendent of the Census directed letters to Dr. Jarvis, without any agreement, as the Superintendent himself says, for compensation at all, apparently without any idea of compensation between the two; and now Dr. Jarvis, having answered those letters, sends in this bill "for answering questions and solving difficulties;" and we are asked not only to pay a bill of this kind, but characterized by this peculiar evil, of which so much has been said, of the Bureau officers making agreements for expenditures unauthorized by law, and then relying upon the good nature of Congress to make payment.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Mr. President, as I have known Dr. Jarvis for many years, I am able to explain one or two peculiarities in this transaction. He is a scientific man; and in the department of vital statistics is probably at the head of the profession in this country; but he has that peculiarity which Agassiz is said to have given expression to when invited to lecture in New York and very high prices were offered, and he said, "I cannot afford to waste my time making money." Dr. Jarvis entered upon this work, no doubt, without any agreement—without any representation on the part of Mr. De Bow as to whether he should be paid or should not be paid. He made no inquiry as to whether Mr. De Bow was authorized, by virtue of the law establishing and regulating his office, to employ such assistance as he asked at the hands of Dr. Jarvis. But he entered upon the work; he did the work that was submitted to him. In the volume in my hand—which is that part of the report of the census of 1850 which relates to vital statistics—the labors of Dr. Jarvis are again and again acknowledged by Mr. De Bow.

Now, the point submitted to the Senate is whether, if these services were performed in good faith; if they were valuable services; if they were, as is stated by Mr. De Bow in the prefatory remarks to this volume, not only valuable with reference to the census of 1850, but valuable, as he said they would be, also in the preparation of future reports, you will mulct Dr. Jarvis for his ignorance of the authority which Mr. De Bow had to make this contract, or whether you will in good faith pay the man for services honestly performed, in the supposition that the party employing him was authorized by the Government to make the contract.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. But Mr. De Bow states that there was no contract.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Certainly, Mr. De Bow states that there was no contract as to the payment; but he admits, from beginning to end in his letter and in this volume over and over, that he made the request for labor, and that the labor was faithfully performed, and that it was valuable labor, not only in reference to this census, but would be in regard to censuses to be afterwards taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired, and the unfinished business is before the Senate, which is the resolution reported by the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SUMNER. I hope we may get a vote on this bill. Let the special order be passed over informally for the moment.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not think we can have a vote by which this claimant will get this money until some of us have an opportunity to assign our reasons for voting against it. I speak for myself as one, as I believe the money ought not to be paid.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, in the chair.) Objection is made.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think we had better proceed with the regular order.

Mr. SCOTT. I intended to address the Senate for a few minutes this morning upon the resolution now regularly before us, but this day, I believe, has been assigned for the purpose of taking up the Louisiana question, upon which the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CARPENTER,] expects to speak; and upon that understanding I yield for the purpose of enabling him to carry out that engagement.

ENROLLED BILLS.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills:

A bill (H. R. No. 1221) to confirm certain land titles in the State of Missouri; and

A bill (S. No. 89) in relation to the lines of telegraph connecting the Capitol with the various Departments of the Government.

SENATOR FROM LOUISIANA.

Mr. CARPENTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution introduced by the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON,] in regard to Louisiana matters.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the following resolution, submitted by Mr. MORTON on the 15th of December, 1873:

Resolved, That the credentials of P. B. S. Pinchback for a seat in the Senate of the United States for six years, commencing on the 4th of March, 1873, being in regular form, he is entitled, under the law and in conformity with the usages of the Senate, to be sworn in as a member, and that whatever ground of contest there may be as to his right to a seat should be made hereafter.

Mr. CARPENTER addressed the Senate. Having spoken till twenty-two minutes before four o'clock,

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is getting late, and my friend from Wisconsin is evidently tired. With his permission I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

[Mr. CARPENTER's speech will be found in full on pages 1036 to 1042.]

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and the Senate (at four o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 29, 1874.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

HALL AND PASSAGES OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. KILLINGER. I ask unanimous consent to report a resolution from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which I think will have the unanimous approval of the House.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives be requested to cause the various halls and passages of the House end of the Capitol building to be cleared of all obstructions, and stalls for the sale of merchandise: Provided, That the telegraph stands shall be provided for in the old Hall of the House of Representatives, in such location therein as the Speaker shall direct.

Mr. W. R. ROBERTS. I object. I think this is rather a small business for the House of Representatives.

Mr. HOLMAN. This power is already possessed by the Speaker of the House.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I think this is a very small business.

Mr. KILLINGER. I will offer the resolution on Monday.

PROVIDENCE HOSPITAL, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

On motion of Mr. COTTON, by unanimous consent, the Committee on the District of Columbia were discharged from the further consideration of a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report on the contract of the Providence Hospital, District of Columbia, for the treatment of transient paupers; and the same was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ARKANSAS ELECTION CASE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House additional papers in the contested-election case from the first district of Arkansas, Bell vs. Snyder.

PENSION AGENTS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, in answer to a resolution of the House of January 19, 1874, in relation to the number of pension agents appointed under existing law, their residences, and the amount of compensation received by each since the 4th day of March, 1869; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

ARMY INSTRUCTIONS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in relation to instructions for the government of the armies of the United States in the field; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Postmaster-General, transmitting, in compliance with the act of June 8, 1872, to revise, consolidate, and amend the statutes of the Post-Office Department, certain reports; which was referred, with the accompanying reports, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

EMPLOYÉS IN INTERNAL-REVENUE BUREAU.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, in answer to a resolution of the House of December 19, 1873, transmitting a statement showing the number of persons employed in the Internal-Revenue Bureau and the compensation paid them on December 1, 1866, and on December 1, 1873; which was referred to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, and ordered to be printed.

INCREASE OF PENSION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Commissioner of Pensions, transmitting the petition of certain citizens of Massachusetts, praying for an increase of pension to those persons so disabled as to require the constant personal aid and attendance of another person; which was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

WASHINGTON AND GEORGETOWN RAILROAD COMPANY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the president of the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company, transmitting, in compliance with law, a report of the operations of the company for the last year; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MONROE. I desire to have some papers referred.

Mr. WHEELER. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. This has been the regular order. The Chair has been pursuing it.

Mr. WHEELER. I supposed the morning hour was the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks executive communications are always in order.

Mr. WHEELER. I awaited the announcement of executive communications before I called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the morning hour now begins at seventeen minutes past twelve o'clock, and reports are in order from the Committee on Banking and Currency.

NATIONAL CURRENCY—FREE BANKING.

Mr. MAYNARD, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported a bill (H. R. No. 1572) to amend the several acts providing a national currency and to establish free banking, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. MAYNARD. This bill is a substitute for several bills which have been referred to the committee. It embraces several divisions, and I will say that the entire committee do not agree to all of them. They desire to discuss them somewhat before the House is called upon to act. They are not ready to enter upon that discussion now; indeed they do not think it is proper to discuss such a bill as this in the morning hour. I am instructed by the committee to move that the bill be printed and recommitted, and to ask that its discussion shall be made a special order for two weeks from to-day, to the exclusion of all prior orders except appropriation bills and the orders which were made the other day on the motion of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, [Mr. DAWES.]

Mr. RANDALL. I object to that portion of the motion directing that this be made a special order.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] mean that this shall be made a special order in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. MAYNARD. The committee have given no instructions as to whether the debate shall be carried on in the House or in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DAWES. I would like to inquire——

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the bill be reported.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read the bill.

Section 1 provides that section 31 of the act entitled "An act to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof," approved June 3, 1864, shall be so amended that the several associations therein provided for shall not hereafter be required to keep on hand any amount of money whatever by reason of the amount of their respective circulations; but the moneys required by said section to be kept at all times on hand shall be determined by the amount of deposits, in all respects as provided for in said section.

Section 2 provides that section 21 of said act, and the several amendments thereto, so far as they restrict the amount of notes for circulation under said act, shall be repealed; and that section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the redemption of the 3 per cent. temporary-loan certificates, and for an increase of national-bank notes," approved July 12, 1870, shall be amended by repealing the second proviso contained in said section.

Section 3 provides that every association organized or to be organized under the provisions of the said act, and of the several acts in amendment thereof, shall at all times keep and have on deposit in the Treasury of the United States, in lawful money of the United States, a sum equal to 5 per cent. of its circulation, to be held and used only for the redemption of such circulation; and when the circulating notes of any such association or associations shall be presented, assorted or unassorted, for redemption, in sums of $1,000 or any multiple thereof, to the Secretary of the Treasury or to the assistant treasurer in the city of New York, the same shall be redeemed in United States notes; that the notes so redeemed shall be charged by the Secretary of the Treasury to the respective associations issuing the same; and he shall notify them severally, on the first day of each month, or oftener at his discretion, of the amount of such redemption, whereupon each association so notified shall forthwith deposit with the Treasury of the United States a sum in United States notes equal to the amount of its circulating notes so redeemed; and when such redemptions have been so reimbursed, the circulating notes so redeemed, or if worn, mutilated, or defaced, new notes instead, shall be forwarded to the respective associations; provided that each of said associations shall reimburse to the Treasury the cost of redemption and of supplying new notes in place of those redeemed; and the associations hereafter organized shall also severally reimburse to the Treasury the cost of engraving and printing their circulating notes; and provided further, that the entire amount of United States notes outstanding and in circulation at any one time shall not exceed the sum of $400,000,000 now authorized by existing laws.

Section 4 provides that any association organized under this act, or any of the acts of which this is an amendment, desiring to withdraw its circulating notes in whole or in part, may, upon deposit of lawful money within the meaning of said act, in sums of not less than $10,000, with the Treasurer of the United States, withdraw a proportionate amount of bonds deposited in pledge for such circulation; and he shall redeem, cancel, and destroy, an amount of the circulating notes of such association equal to the amount issued upon said bonds.

Section 5 provides that sections 31 and 32 of the said act shall be amended by requiring that each of the said associations shall keep its lawful money reserves within its own vaults, at the place where its operations of discount and deposit are carried on; and that all the provisions of the said section requiring or permitting any of the said associations to keep any portion of its legal money reserve elsewhere than in its own vaults, or requiring or permitting the redemption of its circulating notes elsewhere than at its own counter, except as provided in this act, shall be repealed.

Section 6 provides that upon all circulating notes heretofore issued, or hereafter to be issued, whenever the same shall come into the Treasury in payment or deposit for redemption or otherwise, there shall be printed, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, the charter numbers of the associations by which they are severally issued.

Section 7 provides that associations without circulation may be organized under the provisions of said act, upon the deposit with the Treasurer of the United States of not less than $10,000 of United States registered bonds, as provided in section 16 of said act; and associations already organized without circulation are authorized to withdraw their bonds in excess of $10,000.

Section 8 authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to issue at the beginning of each and every month from and including July, 1874, $2,000,000 of United States notes not bearing interest, payable in gold two years after date, of such denominations as he shall deem expedient, not less than ten dollars each, in exchange for and as a substitute for the same amount of United States notes now in circulation, which shall be canceled and destroyed and not reissued; and any excess of gold in, or hereafter coming into, the Treasury of the United States after payment of interest upon the public debt and supplying any deficiency in the revenues provided to meet the current expenses of the Government, shall hereafter be retained as a reserve for the redemption of such notes.

Mr. MAYNARD. I do not recollect whether the proposition I submitted embraced the provision that this bill be made the special order after the morning hour, but that was my intention. I am not instructed by the committee to indicate whether the debate should be had in Committee of the Whole or in the House. My own judgment is that a bill of this character should be debated in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. RANDALL. I reserve the point that the bill must go to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts also reserves that point. But that would not prevent the recommitment of the bill to the Committee on Banking and Currency, though it would prevent the House making an assignment of the bill for discussion in the House.

Mr. DAWES. I do not wish to antagonize the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. MAYNARD.]

The SPEAKER. If the bill is to go to the Committee of the Whole, the Chair would suggest that there is no need of recommitting it.

Mr. MAYNARD. I wish to have the bill recommitted, so that our committee may have it within their control to consider it further if they shall desire to do so, as they probably may have occasion to do before the bill comes before the House for consideration.

Mr. COX. This bill is kindred to all the other bills on this subject, which have been referred to the Committee of the Whole and set down for to-day. I do not think it will antagonize the bill of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.]

Mr. DAWES. I am willing that this bill shall take precedence of the other, if that be the desire.

Mr. COX. We want all these measures under consideration and discussion at once, to be decided upon in their order.

Mr. RANDALL. The bill had better go directly to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DAWES. I would like to have the opinion of the Chair as to whether, under the rule, this bill must go to the Committee of the Whole when it comes up for consideration.

The SPEAKER. There is no question about that whatever.

Mr. DAWES. Then I suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] that, as the Chair indicates, the bill must go ultimately to the Committee of the Whole, unless by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The decision of the Chair is that a bill containing, as this does, provisions changing the character of the public debt, must receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DAWES. Exactly. And therefore as when the bill comes up any member of the House, by raising the point, can send it to the Committee of the Whole, I suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that by allowing it now to go to the Committee of the Whole, his committee can perfect it just as well meanwhile, and can also arrange with the Committee on Ways and Means as to how it shall be taken up. I assure the gentleman that the Committee on Ways and Means find this subject attended with so much difficulty that they are very anxious to let the Committee on Banking and Currency take the lead in this matter. I submit to the gentleman that it is desirable the whole subject be brought up at one time, that we should not have one measure in Committee of the Whole and another in the House, where amendments cannot be offered with any great freedom, and where the gentleman having charge of the measure would be enabled to embarrass the House by having a motion to recommit pending.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I understand that, under the rule, this bill necessarily goes to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. That, however, does not prevent the House recommitting the bill. Though the bill, when considered by the House, must necessarily go to the Committee of the Whole if the point be raised, yet that point has no relevancy whatever upon the motion to recommit. The Chair, however, suggests to the gentleman having charge of the bill that the earlier it is sent to the Committee of the Whole the less embarrassment there will be in reaching it.

Mr. DAWES. I presume there will be no objection to assigning the bill for the same day when the bill from the Committee on Ways and Means is to come up in Committee of the Whole. Thus the two measures can be considered together. I presume there will be no objection to that arrangement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] who is a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, objects to any assignment requiring unanimous consent.

If the bill now goes to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the Calendar, gentlemen of the House are well aware they have in the Committee of the Whole power to lay aside intervening bills, and the majority can reach it whenever they desire to do so.

Mr. MAYNARD. I should feel obliged, Mr. Speaker, in that view of the case, to follow the instruction of the committee and move the bill be recommitted to the committee, and then enter a motion to reconsider that, giving notice, if I can get the floor after the morning hour, in two weeks I will call up the motion to reconsider.

Mr. RANDALL. It would then have to go to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MAYNARD. If we can have an understanding the bill shall come up for discussion in the Committee of the Whole in two weeks, or as soon thereafter as appropriation bills do not interpose, I presume that will be satisfactory.

Mr. DAWES. I will state to the gentleman what is the desire of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. TODD. I have some interest in this question, but cannot hear a word going on. I ask the House be brought to order.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will resume their seats, and nothing will be done until the House comes to order.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Speaker, I was about to state to the gentleman from Tennessee the desire of the Committee on Ways and Means in reference to debate. The Committee on Ways and Means desire to debate their measure earlier than two weeks. They wish, if they can have the time in the House, to take it up next week. The first measure they reported is the tax bill. I had hopes to get that up to-day, but I suppose the Army bill will supersede that. If the Army bill is finished to-day and private bills do not occupy all day to-morrow, I will, with the leave of the House, ask their attention to the tax bill to-morrow afternoon. I do not apprehend that will take a very great while. The desire of the Committee on Ways and Means is to proceed next week to debate these measures; but still, I think, they will with great cheerfulness postpone them for some time to accommodate the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will take occasion to remind gentlemen of the precise rule of the House relating to the Calendar in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The majority can make a tax bill or a general appropriation bill a special order. No other bill can be made a special order in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union except by unanimous consent, but it must go on the general Calendar. All of the general Calendar may, by vote of the committee itself, be laid aside, but that which has been made a special order by the House can be laid aside only by a majority vote in the House, and the vote must, laying it aside, be taken before going into committee, as the special order was made by vote of the House. It will leave the committee all the time in the control of a majority acting in the House or in the committee.

Mr. COX. Will it be in order to amend the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee by sending this bill up to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. It would, unless the gentleman who still holds the floor should demand the previous question. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. MAYNARD,] chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, as holding the floor.

Mr. COX. I desire to make that motion. I do not see why this Committee on Banking and Currency should report this bill simply for the purpose of recommitting it, to themselves. This is the most important matter in this Congress. Why not throw it open to general discussion at once as soon as we can reach it? It ought to take precedence of all bills, tax bills and all other bills. Why not send it to the Committee of the Whole and have this discussion, which is preliminary to any relief to the country? I make that motion if I have the right to make it.

Mr. MAYNARD. I do not yield the floor for the gentleman's motion.

Mr. RANDALL. As one of the minority of the committee, I wish to say a word.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I want to raise a question of order.

Mr. RANDALL. Let me make my statement. As one of a very respectable minority numerically of the Committee on Banking and Currency on this bill, I wish to say it is a matter of entire indifference to me whether it is recommitted to the committee, as suggested by the chairman, or whether it goes immediately to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. If you will observe, when the bill comes back again into the House on a motion to reconsider, the same question of order will lie against it, that it must have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole, and it will have to be sent back to that committee. However, as one of the minority of the Committee on Banking and Currency, I do not want to have any such bill of abominations given preference over other legislation.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I rise to a question of order. I desire to inquire of the Chair whether the bill must not necessarily go to a Committee of the Whole House on the request of a single member? How, under the forty-third rule, can the motion to recommit take precedence?

The SPEAKER. It is on the same basis as the original motion to refer the bill. The motion to recommit the bill would not necessarily bring it before the House.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I desire to inquire of the Chair whether, when a bill is reported and a motion to recommit is made, the bill is not, under the usages of the House, before the House for consideration on that motion? And if that be so, how can that motion take precedence of the demand to send the bill to the Committee of the Whole under the rule? Would not that have the effect——

The SPEAKER. The Chair apprehends the point of the gentleman from Massachusetts to be technically correct. But it has been the universal rule of the House to allow appropriation bills and tax bills to be recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations or the Committee on Ways and Means; and the point would come in just here, that should the House negative the motion to recommit, then the point of order would be held good.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. Would it not necessarily involve this, that a motion to recommit must be submitted without debate?

The SPEAKER. This debate is proceeding altogether by unanimous consent.

Mr. MAYNARD. I desire to say a single word on behalf of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will further say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that, just as on a motion to postpone, there may be a discussion on the reasons for postponement, but not on the merits of the bill; the Chair would not, on a motion to recommit, allow a discussion on the merits of the bill, but only a brief discussion as to the order of business.

The technical point of the gentleman from Massachusetts is correct; but the usage of the House and the convenience of the House require the other ruling; otherwise the committee would be shorn largely of power over its own bill.

Mr. MAYNARD. I was about to remark to the House that the committee did not fail to appreciate the importance of the subject submitted to their consideration. Being aware that they must be called at an early day, they were unwilling to allow that call to pass without submitting to the House some measure which would involve the whole subject of currency and the monetary system. They directed me, therefore, to submit this proposition. They thought that neither this proposition, nor any other, would be as intelligently and as satisfactorily discussed in the House before as after there was an opportunity of its going out into the country and being submitted to the inspection and criticism of thoughtful and intelligent persons there, so that we could have the benefit of such criticism to aid us in our deliberations.

They thought that two weeks was none too much to accomplish this result; and desiring, at what they regarded as the earliest practicable opportunity, to bring the matter before the House, so that it would be discussed and could be acted upon, they instructed me to submit the proposition which I have submitted, but which I will not insist upon in the literal details of it if gentlemen have anything that will be more satisfactory. I am not entertaining any such purpose on my part, and I am sure the committee entertain no such purpose.

I respectfully suggest that if it is understood that the debate shall be taken up at the earliest possible opportunity, say two weeks from this time, gentlemen can prepare themselves to meet the discussion. We can then take up the measure, and if it suits us we can adopt it. If not, every gentleman will have an opportunity to bring forward something which is more worthy, in his opinion, of being debated.

Of course this is not such a measure or such a kind of measure that the opinions of a committee, much less of a majority of any committee of this House, would be possessed of paramount authority. It embraces subjects that every gentleman in the House feels conscious of understanding and being as competent to decide as the ablest committee in the House or the ablest gentleman out of it.

Mr. BURCHARD. I desire to ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] what he desires to gain by recommitting this bill to the Committee on Banking and Currency?

Mr. MAYNARD. The object of recommitting it to the committee was that they might have an opportunity to discuss it among themselves, and, if possible, devise something that would be in their judgment better and more satisfactory than the proposition they have already submitted.

Mr. BURCHARD. How does the gentleman expect to get it before the House when his committee shall have exhausted its call next Tuesday?

Mr. KILLINGER. I desire to make an inquiry of the Chair. If the House refuses to recommit the bill would it not go to the Committee of the Whole under the rule?

The SPEAKER. Immediately.

Mr. KILLINGER. Then the policy of those of us who are anxious for an early discussion and disposition of the question is to refuse to recommit.